Telephone Companies Have No Incentive To Earn Extra Dividends

PRESIDENT W. S. GIFFORD TELLS NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF UTILITY COMMISSIONERS

Best Telephone Service At Lowest Cost Consistent With Financial Safety Policy

Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, in a recent address before the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners in Dallas, Texas, set forth in concrete form a general policy which he stated would guide the management of the Bell System that is of general public interest. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company and Associated Companies, he states, do not expect to make large or excessive profits.

W. S. Gifford, President American Telephone And Telegraph Company

Mr. Gifford called attention to the fact that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company has over 420,000 stockholders and that no one of them owns as much as 1 per cent of the capital stock of the company. The responsibility of the management to these hundreds of thousand of stockholders, he said, is to see to it that they receive reasonable and regular dividends and that their savings are secure and remain so.

A significant part of his address was his statement that in the Bell System there is no incentive to earn speculative or large profits for distribution as "melons or extra dividends." This is a frank public statement of a new business viewpoint. It has been the business policy on which the Bell System has been built. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company has never paid large or extra dividends or distributed any "melons" to its stockholders. It has maintained a persistent policy of paying reasonable dividends to its stockholders and no millionaires have been made out of the telephone business.

The fact that such a large part of the entire telephone service of the country rests solely upon the management of the Bell System, imposes an unusual obligation, in the opinion of President Gifford, upon the management to see to it that the service to the public is at all times adequate, dependable and satisfactory. He adds that the "only sound policy that can meet these obligations is to continue to furnish the best possible telephone service at the lowest cost consistent with financial safety." This policy is bound to succeed in the long run. As Mr. Gifford says, "What the public is most interested in is the most service and the best at the least cost to the public.

"In the twenty years since the State Public Service Commissions have generally taken over the duties of regulating the telephone companies, many surprising events have been brought about by this method of communication," the speaker said. "In 1907 there were about 6,000,000 telephones in the United States, but they were only partially interconnected.

"Today, there are more than 18,000,000 telephones in the United States so interconnected that it is possible for practically any one of these telephones to be connected with reasonable promptness with any other one of this number of stations.

"Practically anyone, anywhere, can now talk by telephone with anyone else anywhere else in the country. Moreover, anyone in the United States can now converse by telephone with anyone in Great Britain, Canada, Cuba, and the principal cities in Mexico. This is real progress in extent and facility of communication, but we realize we are still far from our ultimate goal."

POULTRY

SAVE LEGUME HAY FOR WINTER FEED

Save about six pounds of good legume hay for every bird in your poultry flock for use this winter.

For legume hay, especially if it is leafy and of good quality, makes an excellent winter substitute for the succulent green food hens like so well during the summer. Feeding trials at the Ohio agricultural experiment station, Wooster, have demonstrated the truth of this, according to the experimenters, D. C. Kennard and R. M. Bothke.

Alfalfa, red clover, and soy bean hays appear to be about equally valuable. Regardless of the kind, it is necessary that the hay be made of the immature plant, so as to carry a large proportion of leafy material, especially valuable for chickens.

The hay must be carefully cured without getting wet, the scientists suggest, so that it will hold its bright green color. This insures retention of its valuable water-soluble constituents. Usually the second or third cutting of alfalfa and clover is best. Soy bean hay is best cut when the seeds are just beginning to form in the pods.

Perhaps the best way to feed hay to poultry is to cut it in half-inch lengths. It can then be put into a wire-netting basket feeder and kept before the birds all the time. Uncut hay may be put into feeding racks made of plaster lath placed vertically 2 inches apart. Still another way is to tie the hay in a bundle and suspend it from the ceiling so as to be 5 or 6 inches from the floor.

Examine Bands on Wings and Legs of Chickens

Don't forget the pedigreed stock these days. They are your best chicks. Examine the legbands and wingbands to see that they are not cutting into the flesh and that none of the bands have worked loose and are likely to be lost.

Some breeders use legbands for the first few weeks of the chicks' lives and later transfer these bands to the wings. If this practice is followed on your farm, see that this rebanding time has not gone too long and that the bands are not cutting into the shanks. If it is not convenient to change these bands to the wings just now, loosen them enough so the legs will not be injured and the bands will not drop off.

Other breeders put the bands right in the wings when the chicks are hatched. Catch up these chicks and look over the condition of these wings and bands. They may have been pinched too tightly at the start or for some reason may be partly torn out. Many of these bands may have to be loosened and some may have to be tightened. Make a practice of examining the condition of the bands every three weeks.

Big Advantage to Have Youngsters Roost Early

Early roosting does not cause crooked breast bones, as was formerly thought by many. This is caused by poor bone development due to a deficiency in those elements that are necessary for strong bones. A proper mineral supply, plenty of direct sunshine, or the use of cod liver oil will prevent this condition.

It is to the poultry keeper's advantage to get young stock to roost as early as possible, for if they do not get this habit, it is difficult to teach them when they are put in the laying house. The use of small roosts in the brooder house when chicks are only four or five weeks old will help to start this habit early. These roosts can be hinged to the walls of the brooder house about a foot from the floor. They may be raised during the day to give the chicks full benefit of the floor space, and lowered to the floor in the evening. By having these roosts on all sides of the house, there will be sufficient room for the chicks to spread out and they will all be equi-distant from the brooder stove, providing the stove is in the center of the house.

Coccidiosis Symptoms

Weakness, ruffled feathers, drowsiness, and sometimes bloody droppings, are outward symptoms of coccidiosis. Perform a post-mortem and examine the intestines. If the blind pouches are enlarged and filled with a firm cheesy material, that is an additional symptom of coccidiosis. Some feeding experiments have proven that a diet of nothing but buttermilk may be helpful in controlling this disease. A practical method is to kill all badly diseased chicks.

Soft-Shelled Eggs

Soft-shelled eggs may be prevented first by seeing the hens get plenty of minerals. This is accomplished by having both oyster shells and cracked rock known as hens' grit in front of the hens constantly and by feeding a dry mash which contains about 20 per cent beef scraps. In case you are using milk in place of beef scraps, add about 5 per cent of what the packers call raw bone meal. This will keep indefinitely if kept covered up.

MILLERS

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Hare and children, of Coatesville, Pa., spent several days at the home of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Hare.

Mrs. Ella Shilke and daughters Mildred, Mary and Harriett, of Hanover, spent several days visiting the former's sister, Mrs. Ross Rohrbaugh.

EASTVIEW

Mr. McCaully has had a telephone installed in his home here.

Mr. George Fosset has been out calling on some of his neighbors lately and that is something in his favor for he has been housed now for at least two months.

Mrs. Vinton Caple entertained for Thanksgiving Mr. William Caple and family and others.

Mr. John Hoffman has had his butchering. It makes one feel as though winter is approaching.

Mr. Robert Ward, of Westminster, was down on his farm looking around. We judge there was a homesickness, having lived there for so many years.

Miss Harris, our teacher, has returned to her duties after spending her Thanksgiving with friends in Baltimore.

Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Schnabel and Mr. and Mrs. Ray Hook had as their guests Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Arnold and Mrs. Mary Gorsuch.

Our farmers have about finished husking corn but have not hauled in any fodder.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ogg entertained Mr. Alden Dobson the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Conaway had as guests on Sunday Mr. and Mrs. George Wicks, Sr., and Mr. and Mrs. George Wicks, Jr., and son Franklin, of Baltimore; Mrs. Charles Wagner, of Smallwood; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wicks and son Edward, Mrs. Kate Conaway, Roy Shriver, and Mr. George Fosset. The day was spent pleasantly by all and the hour for home going came too soon.

Mrs. Emma Arnold entertained last week William Hoffman and Delmas Rolle.

Mrs. Kate Ogg had her hogs killed preparatory to making her sausage, lard and meat for another year.

Mrs. Mary Nightengale has been visiting friends in Baltimore.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT M. E. CHURCH

Dr. George W. Cooke, who conducted a revival campaign in Centenary church several years ago, will be at this church again, beginning January 1, and continuing throughout the month: Mr. Vignuelle, barytone, and Mr. Spencer, basso and personal worker will assist him. These Christian workers are having large success everywhere they go, and will be welcome again to the city by their Westminster friends.

Formerly hunters were expected to bring some game home to their families, but now all their families ask is to have the husbands return without getting mistaken for a deer.

The women used to defend themselves against rough husbands with the flatiron and the broomstick, but many of the newlyweds could do greater execution with the curling iron now.
