In Memoriam

PORTER—In loving remembrance of my wife and our mother, Mrs. Evangeline Porter, who died one year ago today, December 3rd, 1935.

We walked together you and I
In sorrow and in joy;
We shared our pains and happiness
With love without alloy.
And Death shall never end our love,
For through the mist I see
Our glad reunion in the skies,
For all eternity.

BY HER HUSBAND.

Our family circle broken, still
Its bond of love shall keep.
Holding the faith that mother taught
Before she went to sleep;
Knowing that He who tends his flock
Shelters her with his sheep.

BY HER CHILDREN.

HOLLYWOOD STAR-LITES

By Chuck Cochard

It may sound funny in 1936, but the modern chorus girl of today is just as old-fashioned as her grandmother, when it comes to saving letters for sentimental reasons. The dancers on one of the large musical sets at M-G-M admitted this today—that they even preserve their love letters in ribboned-packages.

Black-haired Marion Shelton had a far-away look in her eyes as she said that she "kept her letters, because it makes her feel good to be reminded what certain people thought at certain times." Doris Toddings uses her love letters only to get a good laugh. Two of the group said they burned their letters after reading them twice. They explained that loose love letters might get somebody in trouble.

The youngest of the chorus, Alma Faulkner, uses her letters to keep from getting bored. "I read my letters when I can't find anything to do," was her retort.

What's This: Carole Lombard, starting work in her next pixture "Swing High, Swing Low," today has had her screen name legalized, a procedure most recently followed by Bob Burns and Kay Francis . . . Robert Taylor's fans have become so enthused since he was co-starred with Greta Garbo in "Camille," that his fan mail has jumped to a weekly average of 9,000 letters and cards.

—o—

Star-Lites: The first educational film ever produced by a major studio for exclusive distribution to schools has been completed by Cecil B. DeMille. The picture shows the development of the plain regions of North America. . . Do you remember Sue Carol of a few years ago. She has just been signed for a role in "Doctor's Diary" . . . Even El Brendel, the Swedish comedian, is staging his comeback in "The Holy Terror," Jane Withers next pixture.

Hollywood Stylescope by Hazel May: Link rings are the newest and smartest item in the film colony . . . These rings are fashioned of tiny letters in platinum and diamonds . . . Speaking of new things, the latest rage in hats are the ones with the large feathers. Betty Furness has one measuring more than three feet . . . Those felt crushers that the male sex used to wear are fast becoming all the rage for women.

Notes on my cuff: Wear and tear on the precious Lily Pons larynx is avoided by a vocal standing—a gal whose voice has similar pitch and volume . . . Ruby Keeler is a staunch defender of stock-inged legs and a rabid enemy of stockingless ones, claiming that a woman's legs always look best in silk . . . Dick Powell, who is a photographic fan, has a library of more than 5,000 candid camera shots, most of which he has made himself . . . The shapely legs of Sonja Heinie, the ones which carried her through three Olympic Games Figure-skating championships are insured for $100,000.

Snapshots: Buddy Rogers swamped with congratulations after the announcement of his engagement to Mary Pickford . . . Johnny Downs—Eleanore and Betty Grable—Jackie Coogan dancing at the Casanova . . . Regardless of all the rumors that the Bob Cobb—Gail Patrick romance is off he's one of the very few people who has heard from her since she's been in Honolulu.

Inside Gossip: The French actress recently imported from Europe who is reported to have gone back to her old habits of tempermental outbreaks is Simon Simone.

What well-known off the screen couple who have been married for some time are calling it quits for the last time after many patched-up quarrels?

That's all for today. Until next week I remain your Hollywood correspondent who says "The girl who wants to branch out in Hollywood must have good limbs!"

Hold Venereal Disease Clinics At Stevensville

Walter N. Kirkman, Chief of the Bureau of Personnel and Accounts, connected with the Maryland State Board of Health was in the county this week, and with Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, Acting Deputy Health Officer for Queen Anne's county completed plans for the holding of a weekly clinic for Venereal Diseases at Stevensville.

The first clinic was held Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock, in the Grollman building, and continued each Tuesday eveing thereafter.

The first clinic will be held next Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock, in the Grollman building, and continued each Tuesday evening thereafter.

The State Health Department is making a consistent drive against the prevalence of diseases of this nature, and are hopeful eventually of placing Maryland in the class with Massachusetts, which has practically wiped out the disease.

FED TO THE SHARKS

True, stark, real life epic surpassing any tale of fiction of the sea—a startling true story of men who challenged destiny. One of many features on the December 13th issue of the American Weekly, the big magazine which comes regularly with the BALTIMORE AMERICAN.

PREPARING FOR SPRING

December often brings days suitable for final touches to the garden before winter sets in. Even though fall plantings may have been finished, forehanded gardners have taken advantage of good weather to prepare beds and borders for next spring's planting.

Such advance preparation not only saves time in the spring, when there are so many things to be done, but also results in getting the soil into a productive state. Manure, humus, and the like, if dug in now will have a chance to decay and "mellow" during the winter months, and thus enable the plant roots, in March and April, to take full advantage of the soil so improved. Moreover, soil that is dug or forked deeply now may be reprepared for planting in the spring with a minimum of labor, and will work up into the best possible condition.

Vegetable gardens and other fairly large areas are often dug extra deep, or "retrenched," in the late fall. Raw soil brought to the surface in this process is allowed to remain without any raking or smoothing, as the rough surface permits more complete action by sun and frost in breaking it up and making it mellow.

Quick-acting fertilizers, how-ever, are not applied at this time, as there would be considerable loss through leaching and nitrofication during the winter months.

As hard, freezing weather may be expected at almost any time now, gardeners are taking up late vegetables—such as beets, carrots, turnips or winter radishes—which still remain in the soil. As parsnips and oyster plants are not injured by freezing (in fact, they are considerably improved by it) a portion of each crop may be left out in the ground over the winter for early spring use.

Root crops are usually stored, dry, in bins or boxes, like potatoes, yet they will keep better if covered with sand, soil, or fairly moist peatmoss. Peatmoss, being light, clean and perfectly sterile, is excellent for the purpose; and it can be used in the garden in the spring after having served its term as a winter insulator.

In a very dry cellar, such as most of those that have cement floors, even potatoes will be more soundly conserved if they are packed in light soil or peat-moss. Squash, pumpkin and sweet potatoes, on the other hand, must be kept perfectly dry, as any moist material in contact with them will quickly cause decay. They require, too, a higher temperature, preferably 45 to 50 degrees; whereas the root crops keep best at a temperature near or slightly below 40 degrees.

Even though most border plantings of bulbs hay have been made there are probably many nooks and corners in the rock garden where a few dozen of the smaller things—such as the species daffodils, the smaller flowering species tulips, crocuses, a glory-of-snow, grape-hyacinths, Siberian squills and others—may be tucked in. With a very small investment of time and money these will make a series of charming miniature pictures in the spring. It is not necessary to plant these bulbs in large quantities. Half a dozen to a dozen bulbs of a kind, in one place, will make an interesting point of accent. And most of them will increase rapidly, with a little care, and in a few years form good-sized "colonies."

Peatmoss makes an excellent mulch for many perennials and bulbs, but as it absorbs and holds a great deal of moisture it is not used around plants which form a crown, or mat of foliage, that is carried through the winter. Many rock-garden plants are of this type, and for these excelsior has proved to be one of the best mulching materials. It provides the needed protection from sun and wind but remains dry and does not pack down close around the foliage.

For the perennial border, marsh or salt hay is often used, but care is taken that it be clean and free of weeds. It may be obtained in bales, and a single bale will provide covering for a considerable area. Leaves are suitable for some purposes, but they should be from hardwood trees, as the leaves from maples, birches and similar trees decay quickly and form a soggy mass which is far from suitable for mulching purposes.

In potting plants for winter use it ie well to keep in mind that recent experiments have demonstrated that, for many types of plants, a non-porus container is much better than the old-fashioned clay pot. Such containers are now available in many attractive designs and colors.
