Nation To Mark Three Health Features In May

Child Health Day Set For May 1· Mother's Day, Parenthood Also Noted

Three special nation-wide health observances—Child Health Day, May 1; Mother's Day, May 8; and Better Parenthood Week, May 1-8—are linked together in a proclamation issued by Governor Nice, emphasizing the importance of these occasions and calling upon all Marylanders to do all in their power toward the furtherance of year-round activities for safeguarding the health and welfare of children and young people and for the promotion of wholesome family life in this state.

Calling attention to the Governor's proclamation, Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health said "The health of the mother, the welfare of the child and the development of family well-being, are so inseparably connected that we think of them as we do of the famous musketeers—One for All and All for One.

"The aims of the triple observance, as pointed out by Governor Nice are the furtherance of measures to secure:

"For All Children: Safe birth, normal growth, protection against disease and accident;

"For All Mothers: Protection against avoidable dangers; adequate care before, during and after childbirth;

"For Parents: Instruction in the essentials of personal and family health; protection against avoidable illnesses; environmental safeguards."

"Plans are under way" Dr. Riley continued, "for the State-wide observance of Child Health Day. We are glad to include the other events in our program, which stresses:

"The right of every child and every mother to adequate protection.

"The right of every young child to be protected against diphtheria and smallpox and to be safeguarded against other diseases and against avoidable accidents.

"The nutritional needs of growing children.

"The recreational needs of children and young people; for safe and suitable places for play and pleasure and for protection against avoidable danger.

"To these we have added: The need for education for parenthood. This is implied in all of the other headings but is particularly emphasized in accordance with the Governor's message.

"The triple observance challenges each of us to even greater and more personal interest in each of these particulars and deepens community responsibility for cooperative and constructive efforts toward their realization".

"Arrangements for the health observances throughout the State are under the direction of the Child Health Day Committee of which Dr. J. H. M. Knox, Jr., Chief the State Bureau of Child Hygiene, is chairman. The committee includes representatives of State and City Departments of Health and Education; State and County Medical Societies; organizations concerned with the care of mothers and children; recreational groups; service clubs and other groups."

Chairmen For Woman's Club

Committee Assigned For Coming Year's Work

Departmental chairmen were named by Mrs. A. A. M. Dewing, president of the Centreville Woman's Club, at a meeting of the newly elected Executive Board held at the home of the president on Monday afternoon.

The assignments include:Program committee, Mrs. Frank Elzey; hospitality, Mrs. M. Wilson Harris; membership, Mrs. George Ryland; civic, Mrs. Alfred M. Green; welfare, Mrs. Charles Barney; dramatics, Mrs. Sterling G. Harris; refreshments, Mrs. Claude B. Anthony; flowers and sick, Mrs. J. Elmer Anthony; publicity, Mrs. Vachel A. Downes.

Initial plans were made for the annual Fall Flower Show which is sponsored by the organization. Mrs. Alfred M. Green has been named general chairman with assistants to be appointed later.

The show will be open to the public and an effort is to be made to encourage greater cultivation of flowers in the community. A chart showing variety, time of planting and other aids is to be issued later.

The regular meeting of the club will be held on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Little Theatre.

Obituary

CLAUD GLANDING DAVIS

Claud Glanding, formerly well-known as a printer in Centreville, died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Norman Wilson of Ridgely, early Tuesday morning at 12:15 o'clock. He was 63 years old.

He was born in Centreville on July 15. 1875, the son of the late Isaac and Elizabeth A. Davis. Most of his early life was spent in Centreville. He learned the printer's trade in the old Centreville Record and later worked on the Centreville Observer also. He was a former member of the Fifth Regiment, Maryland National Guard.

He is survived by a sister, Mrs. Norman Wilson, and a brother, John D. Davis, both of Ridgely.

Funeral services will be held from the home of Mrs. Wilson today, Thursday, at 2 o'clock with the Rev, O. B. Reed officiating.

The bearers will be his nephews, N. D. Wilson, J. I. Wilson, J. G. Wilson, D. W. Davis, J. W. Davis and Clinton Stoopes.

Interment will be in Chesterfield cemetery at Centreville.

Ferry To Dedicate Romancoke Terminal

The Claiborne-Annapolis ferry company will celebrate the maiden voyage of the ferryboat "Governor Harry W. Nice," the christening of the "Governor Emerson C. Harrington, II," and the dedication of the new terminal at Romancoke with appropriate exercises next Tuesday.

The maiden voyage of the Governor Nice and the christening of the Governor Harrington will take place at 12:30 p. m. Miss Winifred D. Harrington is to sponsor the new vessel. Miss Margaret Ann Sherman is to officiate at the dedication of the terminal where exercises will commence at 2:30 p. m. A large number of leaders in state, civic and business circles have been invited to attend the celebration.

New Records Made By County Guernseys

New records exceeding the average of the Guernsey breed for age and class have recently been completed by two county-owned Purebred Gurenseys under the supervision of the University of Maryland.

Hardwick's Elsie, a three-year-old owned by S. Reese Hatchitt, of Great Hopes Farms, has made an official record of 8,240.8 pounds of milk and 402.2 pounds of butterfat in class EEE. Broadland Chorine, a three and half year old cow owned by Thomas Marsalis of My Lord's Gift, has made a record of 12,178 pounds of milk and 597 pounds of butterfat in class D.

Chain Stores Pass Savings On To Consumers

Public Has Welcomed Their Selling Methods, Clean Attractive Stores

"I see the chain-store question as a social question, to be decided on the basis not of special interest, but of greatest good to greatest number . . ." says Don Francis of the Lord and Thomas firm.

"Being a chain is not a matter of size, but a matter of method. Why has this method spread and flourished? It is because the chains had a new idea of serving the consumer, and the consumer welcomed that idea.

"First of all, the chains offered lower prices. How? They were competing with a retailing system handicapped by credit losses and by wasteful, duplicating facilities; they introduced cash-and-carry merchandising, and passed the saving on to the consumer. They came into a field dominated by small, badly managed stores, and introduced order and efficiency, and passed that savings on. Recognizing the high costs of the old wholesaler-retailer relationships, they took upon their own shoulders a good many of the wholesaler's functions, and passed that saving on. They learned that two stores could operate more cheaply than one, and ten stores more cheaply still, and they passed that saving on.

"Next, they offered cleaner and more attractive stores. They built fixtures and displayed goods for the consumer's benefit. They chose their locations systematically, for the consumer's convention.

"The chains adopted a modern selling method which the rank and file of small retailers had largely neglected —advertising . . .

"So what happened? They came on the American scene when official and unofficial observers were exhorting us to simplify distribution, reduce waste and lower prices. So well did the chains meet this challenge that they sold, and still sell, at an average of 10 per cent less than the single-store operator. That means a saving to lower-income and middle-income families of an estimated $750,000,000 a year. Of this saving, 82.6 percent represents economies in handling merchandise . . .

"At the same time, the chains brought big-city variety and bargains to small towns. They improved real estate values and kept neighborhood trade at home. They offered new opportunities for advancement to thousands of able citizens who could not be limited to the horizon of a single store. They increased the standard of living for millions, by lowering the cost of necessities, thus enabling them to share in some of the luxuries . . .

"We are told that we should return to the distribution systems of twenty-five years ago; that we should grant a monopoly to those types of wholesale and retail agencies—and only those—that existed in 1913.

"One of the sorest points in our whole distribution system has been the marketing of farm products . . . The chains, through low retail prices, were already performing a special service to the rural population, to labor, and to the underprivileged; they also reached out to serve the farmer as a producer by bringing him closer to his markets. A very recent report on "Chain Store Distributuion of Fruits and Vegetables in the Northeastern States' (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture) testifies. 'The chain systems have unquestionably improved the efficiency and reduced the cost of getting fruits and vegetables from grower to consumer.'

"The question of monopoly has been raised in connection with the growth of chains. Let us consider: Is there monopoly? Is there a threat of monopoly? The answer to these questions should be weighed seriously in judging proposed changes in distribution.

"There is no monopoly today. The Federal Trade Commission examined this question in detail, and found no cause for alarm. The Department of Agriculture reported: 'The field of retailing is perhaps the most competitive sphere in industry or commerce . . . Concentration of corporate control does not even approach that existing in many other parts of the economic system.'

"I argue, not simply for chain stores, but for the preservation of a system that encourages improvement, a system that does not punish efficiency with death. I ask that first consideration be given the American consumer whose living costs will rise if the chain store method is legislated out of existence."

Motorcycle Couriers Make Legion Roundup

Motorcycles with couriers flashing from strategic points all over Maryland on Wednesday converged upon Baltimore to make the last roundup of 1938 memberships in the State Department of the American Legion. The roundup was arranged through the cooperation of Major Elmer Munshower, commander of the State Police, who assigned patrolmen to make the pickups from various posts and rush them to the War Memorial Building in Baltimore.

At Centreville the courier picked up memberships from Jeff Davis Post whcih showed 101 percent of its 1938 quota reached and from the Clarence E. Wilson Post which reached 150 percent for one of top records in the state this year. The novel type of roundup created considerable interest among the local posts.
