MOTHERS and FATHERS

It's up to you to open an account for every one of your youngsters and see that they add to it each week or month—this will foster in them the habit of saving and a plan for the needs of early manhood or womanhood.

THEN the stiffening of the moral backbone and the development of the judgment are sure to come with the practice of thrift.

SAVING MONEY strengthens character through the lessons of SELF-DENIAL; SELF-CONTROL.

THIS BANK IS ALWAYS PLEASED TO HAVE THE YOUNG FOLKS' ACCOUNTS.

School Shoes For The Children

Now is the time to shoe the youngsters with shoes that will wear. Don't buy a shoe for the price, buy it for the wear it gives. If our shoes don't wear we make it right.

Men! it is time to put away that straw hat and get into one of our latest style felts.

PRICES RANGE FROM $3.00 TO $4.75. ALSO NEW CAPS $1.50 AND $2.00.

J. Thomas Anders

Shoes for all the family.

Came Out of War Clean

"Herbert Hoover came out of the war clean," declared Senator Hitchcock, Democrat, of Nebraska, in the Senate in 1919. "He came out having rendered a great service to the American people. He came out at the head of a great army of volunteer citizens—men, women and children—who had, at his request, saved and skimped, and had thus helped him to conserve the food that was necessary to win the war."

Labor Improves Conditions

Labor in its collective efforts has contributed greatly to the maintenance of proper wages and to improved conditions of labor. But collective bargaining alone cannot overcome the forces that make for unemployment. The problem of insuring full work all the time is a problem of national concern. Our workers as citizens at the ballot box have a large part in determining our economic policies.—HERBERT HOOVER in his Newark speech

FARM STOCK

CHILDREN USED TO HERD SHEEP

When there are children in the family they will often take delight in herding a flock of sheep in odd corners about the fields where weeds are prevalent. Children take to sheep like robins to a cherry tree, and in most instances can do as well in caring for them as grown persons. In the fall when more time is available the flock may be grazed along the roadside under the watchful eye of some one working near; or when the lambs get old enough to wean, or before that even, they may be safely trusted to graze in the road or in an adjoining field without straying far away. Then there is nothing nicer to clean the weeds out of the cornfield and strip the lower blades off the corn in the fall than a flock of lambs. They hardly ever bother the ears of corn and will pay their owner a mighty good profit for the privilege of converting into mutton and wool roughage that would otherwise be of no value.

Many farmers never think seriously of owning sheep until the price begins to soar. Then they rush in at a high price generally getting out again after the price has slumped. Others start with a few ewes, and often because of the success which invariably comes from handling a small flock, they suddenly begin to expand their operations feverishly, thinking they have discovered a short cut to getting rich quick. As a rule they are not long in discovering that increased operations require a somewhat disproportionate increase in care and attention, lest profit be changed into loss. Here at "Hereford Farms" we keep about 20 to 25 ewes year in and year out; high or low mutton or lambs, cheap wool or a good price, our sheep are always as good as anything else and their place on the farm is secure.—William E. Allyn, Missouri Farmer Staff.

Docking Market Lambs Is Profitable Practice

It is possible to market young lambs, weighing 70 to 80 pounds, that have not been docked nor castrated, and receive top market price for them, according to W. G. Kammlade, University of Illinois. However, this is only possible during a short time and lambs so marketed must be young and not have developed any evidence of masculine characteristics, he points out.

"The reason we recommend that all lambs intended for market be docked and castrated is that while we plan on marketing them young, it may not be possible to follow this plan," he says. "Futhermore, if properly done, these operations cause no set-back of the lambs."

The best age to dock and castrate lambs is when they are from ten to twenty days old. At that time the shock is not great and the operations are easily performed.

Treatment for Pigs Is Essential While Young

Young pigs are set back much less by castration than are older ones and consequently this operation should be gotten out of the way as early as possible in the pig's life. Young pigs are also much more conveniently handled during the operation than are older ones and losses among the young ones will also be less and slowing up of gains will be smaller during the healing process.

If the pigs are to be vaccinated after castration, the vaccination should be delayed for a week or ten days to let the wounds from the operation heal properly. On the other hand, if the pigs are to be vaccinated before the operation, as is done in some herds, the castration should not follow until about a month after vaccination.

Improving Sheep Flock by Particular Culling

If you have got a thrifty, profitable flock of sheep and especially if you used a good pure-bred ram, select as many of the best ewe lambs as you have ewes that should be culled out of the flock, keep these ewe lambs to improve your flock. Pick lambs that are the most typical of the breed your flock represents, pick a lamb with legs well set apart, set out on the corners you might say, this will be a lamb with constitution that should develop into a good producing mother. There is much in breeding even in your market flock. Twin-producing and heavy-milking ewes are more apt to produce that kind. Records indicate that the mother ewe controls the twin-producing habit to a much greater extent than does the flock ram.

Money in Sheep

There is good money in sheep, provided, of course, that you do not overstock. One of the most successful sheep men in this country says that there should be ten ewes on every 80-acre farm. This small number will not overstock the place, will not necessitate so much sheep-tight fence, and will not interfere with other farm work. The average farmer who will give sheep reasonable care can make extra good money on a small bunch of sheep.
