LESS MARYLAND WHEAT

Present prospects indicate a Maryland winter wheat crop of 7,917,000 bushels, according to the Maryland Crop Reporting Service. Last year the state's wheat crop was 9,420,000 bushels and the ten-year average (1928-37) was 8,419,000 bushels. If present prospects materialize, the wheat crop this year will be the smallest since 1934, when 7,630,000 bushels were produced. The 1939 yield per seeded acre is estimated at 19.5 bushels per acre—the same as last year, but 1.2 bushels above the ten-year average yield per seeded acre.
