Traffic Deaths Mount In April With 31 Killed

Speed Blamed. 1939 Total 6 Under Last Year For Same Period

Traffic deaths in Maryland in April totaled 31, one more than for the same month last year, bringing the fatalities for 1939 to 116. This represents a decrease of six deaths from the first four months of 1938. April, incidentally, was the first month this year to show an increase over a similar month of the preceding year.

The Eastern Shore contributed four deaths, two in Cecil county, one each in Kent and Wicomico. Queen Anne's and five other counties had a clear record. Baltimore City had 11 fatalities.

Of those killed in April, seventeen, or more than half the total were pedestrians, 4 were drivers, 9 passengers and one a bicyclist. The majority of the fatalities were incurred under conditions usually considered safe, except that twenty-three deaths occurred in hours of darkness and only eight in daylight, and that in 19 cases the driver was operating his car too fast for conditions.

Otherwise it was mainly the usual story of sober, experienced white drivers, on dry, hard-surfaced roads, in clear, dry weather, in cars without defects. Only two deaths occurred from collisions between motor vehicle.

Seventeen drivers were exonerated, three were hit-run, five held for the grand jury, and seven still pending.

As an indication of how the deaths mounted each week, two persons met death on Mondays, Tuesday or Wednesdays, three on Thursdays, five on Fridays, six on Saturdays and eleven on Sundays. Commissioner W. Lee Elgin issued a warning that twilight is the high accident period of the day in summer when there are hours between daylight and dark and urges a slackening of speed as visibility decreases.

Start Campaign To Explain Auto Financing

A nation-wide advertising campaign using newspapers, magazines and billboards has been instituted by the Universal Credit Company to inform the public about the important business of automobile financing, Mr. F. G. Reiter local office manager, announced here today.

"Our campaign is purely educational," said Mr. Reiter. It will discuss publicly the important business of automobile financing. A larger part of the income of the American people each year goes into automobile instalment purchases, simply because the device of credit provides a convenient way to get new transportation without the immediate outlay of considerable cash.

"Although instalment financing plans have been available for many years, the public never has known except in a vague manner what constitutes fair rates and good service in the field.

"It is estimated that there are now 400 to 1000 different companies offering automobile financing services to the public.

"As a large national company operating in this field, confining our business to Ford dealers exclusively, we felt some time ago that the time had come to give the public an insight into the whole business of automobile financing. We felt that if we could tell the public what services it is entitled to and what charges are fair for such services, we would be able to help car buyers discriminate in selecting a finance service and help them to save money.

"Many car buyers have been deterred from utilizing their right to credit purchasing by the confusion existing in their minds regarding credit methods and practices. The fact that emergency loans for remedial purposes are entirely different from transactions involving the time sale income-producing or pleasure-giving articles is not generally understood.

"It is to combat this needless apprehension in the public's mind that we are throwing light upon the entire matter of automobile credit purchasing.

"To describe the operation of a reputable financing firm, we shall present facts about our company. We shall show that ours is a wholly legitimate and necessary business, performing an important economic service at a reasonable charge, considering the risks involved.

"We shall show that our business is nation-wide in scope and that Universal Credit practices are standarized throughout the United States.

"Finally, we shall trace the intimate connection of automobile instalment buying with the prosperity of the country, demonstrating that without the instrumentality of purchaser credit, the automotive industry could never have risen to its present important position."

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Lewis had as their guests Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Woody Collier and daugther Barbara of Grasonville; Mr. and Mrs. Louis H. Jones and daughter Lois, Mr. and Mrs. Kirby Thompson.
