without a break. On one occasion he made a valiant effort to arrive in school on time in the teeth of a blizzard, finally getting there only to find that for once the weather had triumphed over other things and school was called off for the day.

Pressure was on James when he enrolled in Stevesnville high school. He was larger then, but the distance was greater. Again he defied the jinxes of sickness, weather, bad roads to be present when the roll was called.

During his first six year of school James averaged "B" in his subjects. For the last five his average was "C". But his average for attendance was always perfect.

James has a brother, Raymond, aged twelve, who sought to step in his older brother's wake. But Ray could not escape the barriers of sickness so well. However, he completed five of his seven years in the elementary school with a perfect record for attendance, showing that the spirit at least was willing. Ray will enter Stevensville high school in September.

Farm Poultry Calendar

By Mark Miller
Assistant County Agent

June is the month when hot weather is really prevalent and often times seriously affects the poultry program. No doubt you will have noticed that egg production has started down the grade. Hens should average 17 eggs each for the month. With the approach of hot weather it seems advisable to sell or pen up all the adult male birds, except where the eggs are used for hatching purposes. We must always remember that an infertile egg does not spoil as readily as a fertile egg. A fertile egg starts germ development at a temperature of 68 degrees Fahrenheit.

Keep a close check on your birds for lice and especially check under the roost rails for red mites. Lice on birds are a tremendous pest to the bird and it should always be remembered that lice are not blood suckers. They live on the scale and scurf of the body and feathers. The principal harm is in the discomfort caused by the crawling parasites which make the birds uneasy and perhaps cause a slight damage to the plumage.

Treatment should be applied to the individual bird in preference to the house, however, successful results have been obtained by house treatment with nicotine sulphate, sold under the trade name as "Black Leaf 40" applied as a thin film to the upper surface of the roosting poles in the evening a few minutes before they are occupied by the birds. When individual treatment is given, sodium fluoride dusted into the plumage or dissolved in water at the rate of 1 ounce per gallon and used as a dip gives good results. The dipping method should be used in warm weather only and treatment early in the day will give the feathers time to dry before night. However, in either case a second application in 10 days will kill the lice which have hatched since the first treatment. Both materials mentioned are very poisonous and should be handled with care.

Crude petroleum, crank case oil, or a heavy coal tar product such as carbolineum, or creosote oil will prove very satisfactory when applied to the roosts for controlling red mites.
