Negro Stabbed Near Heart Battles Officers

Isaiah Forman, Centreville negro, who precipitated a near riot at Broadway and Commerce street two years ago and who has recently returned after serving a year's sentence in the House of Correction, was stabbed near the heart in a fracas in Sandy Bottom and taken to Easton Emergency Hospital.

Forman was said to have visited Sandy Bottom while liquored up and to have asked Herman Thorington, negro, to take him home. When Thorington refused Forman tore a door off Thorington's car and smashed a bottle over the latter's head. Thorington then is alleged to have driven a knife into Forman's chest, the blade missing the heart and turning toward the right lung.

Another negro, James Ryan, of Chester, Penna., offered to take Forman home but dumped him out near the Telephone exchange. When Sheriff Edward Earl Coursey and Constable Louis Perkins approached Forman he started to battle them. The officers aided by a couple of young men took Forman to the office of Dr. C. Rodney Layton for treatment. Forman tried to wreck the office but was subdued and after being given first aid, was taken to the Easton Hospital.

Both Forman and Thorington were placed under arrest on assault charges.

THE DISTILLING industry in Maryland is one of age and tradition. A Marylander was producing whiskey on a commercial scale in 1696 at a time when other Colonies were dependent upon imported liquors and such supplies of rum as found their way to them from New England. This man was William Workmen, formerly an indentured Englishman who served his time so well that he received a grant of 50 acres of land with his freedom. Workmen moved to Kent Island, set up his distillery and prospered so well that he made for himself a place among the most generous contributors to the funds which established King William's Academy, now St. Johns College at Annapolis. Then as today, the distilling industry was one of vital economic importance to the State.

"Sing a Song of Sixpence, A Pocketful of Rye"

But Who Wants a Mere Pocketful?

Apply GRANULAR 'AERO' CYANAMID to your cover crop and you will get—not a pocketful—but tons of rye or any other cover crop.

At the end of the season—after you have harvested a cash crop—your soil needs additional nitrogen to grow a good cover crop. GRANULAR 'AERO' CYANAMID supplies that needed nitrogen.

'Aero' Cyanamid

grows heavier cover crops. And heavier cover crops mean more organic matter to plow under. And more organic matter means richer humus. And richer humus means better crops next spring.

Order Your Supply of GRANULAR 'AERO' CYANAMID From Your Fertilizer Dealer Now, and Apply It Before You Seed Your Cover Crop
