U. S. Crop Insurance Tested By Drought in Wheat Areas

Autumn drought, which seared the plains in many sections west of the Mississippi from Nebraska to the Gulf, is giving the Government's wheat insurance plan, now in its second year, a thorough tryout.

Many farmers who counted on getting a crop from wheat planted this autumn will harvest little, according to reports gathered in a survey by The Christian Science Monitor. But those who insured their crops can count on collecting premiums up to 75 per cent of their average yield per acre.

This is the bright spot in the winter wheat picture. The Federal agency insuring the wheat—the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation—expects to have to make payments to a rather large proportion of the 300,000 farmers who have insured their wheat crops this year, and that will be a drain on the new Corporation. But good years will follow to make up for this lean one, say Federal officials, and they feel sure that insurance rates have been worked out so sound an actuarial basis that they will stand the test. They are based on 10-year average yields in the counties, and in 10 years of insurance this year can easily be made up, the officials say.

Not All Have Insurance

Of course not all farmers have taken out insurance. The national average among wheat growers is said to be about 30 percent. The proportion goes up in the high-risk area where drought is prevalent, but even so it does not includ all the losers by any means. However, the number of farmers taking out insurance trebled in some areas this year, and the national average went up two and one-half times.

But many farmers are wondering now if their winter wheat crop is going to bring back to them what it will cost to produce it. This crop is planted in late autumn and must have rain to get its start before the snow falls. Then in the spring it is ready to go, and matures in the early summer. But if it doesn't get its autumn start, it is not likely to survive the freezing time. And that's what is bothering farmers now in Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado and nearby states.

For the dust bowl is very dusty again. Soil is dry from 6 to 12 inches down, according to reports received by the Monitor from farm authorities in Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. Some of the reports on winter wheat from these States and others are as follows:

Kansas: Drought has greatly reduced planting area. Winter wheat probably will not reach AAA allotments. Old-timers say this is the worst autumn for winter wheat they can remember in 30 years.

Oklahoma: Fall planting cut short by drought. An estimate by the Santa Fe Railway puts the acreage of this crop at 75 per cent of normal.

Colorado: Prospects for winter wheat worst since 1934.

Texas: Panhandle reports poorest outlook in years for winter wheat. Similar news from North Texas Blacklands.

Missouri: The seed was literally "dusted in," says an observer there, and will probably blow out unless rain comes soon.

Outside this particular drought area, much better conditions are reported. Montana, South Dakota, and Michigan report their winter wheat getting along nicely.

Corn Crop Abundant

In some of the dusty States, the crops that mature in autumn came through fairly well, despite the lack of moisture. Corn in Iowa and Illinois gave an unusually abundant yield, about 50 bushels to the acre. Missouri reports its corn safe. But Nebraska's corn crop was somewhat reduced in volume, as were its other feed crops. Colorado found all of its crops except potatoes less abundant than last year's and four of them, including corn, below the 10-year average.

Most of Tennessee's crops, too, were below average in volume, due to the drought. But cotton was unharmed. The dry weather was good for picking.

Texas appears to be especially hard hit by lack of rainfall. Observes a farm authority there: "Many parts of the topsoil and subsoil are both gone. Orange lands are brown instead of green. Farmers are hauling water." Similar conditions are reported in Oklahoma .

While a small winter wheat crop may mean hardship to individual farmers, it is not regarded as an unmitigated calamity. Very large wheat stores are now on hand. "There is a big pile-up of wheat in the world, probably enough for 1939-40," according to a Kansas wheat expert. There won't be any shortage, in any case, and decreased stocks may be expected to push prices up.

SUDLERSVILLE

The members of Company K, from this community are with the company and are at Camp Ritchie this week. The boys certainly looked nice, when they left, with their winter uniforms and their new overcoats.

Mr. Wesley McKnett and Mr. Ed. Graham, who are doing the assessing in the First District, are just about finishing up their work. They are now doing the town of Sudlersville.

Mr. Kenneth Walraven who has been with Anderson & Walls, for the past two years, has gone in business for himself. He is now operating the Sinclair Service Station on the north end of town.

Mrs. Walter Stevens has been a recent guest of her sister, Miss Anna Jump at Wyoming, Del.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Marvel entertained on Sunday, Mrs. Marvil's mother, Mrs. Lillian Rigby, her aunt, Mrs. B. M. West and some friends, Mrs. May Cornwell, Mrs. Catherine Rice and son, all of Philadelphia.

Miss Emily Straughn is visiting with friends in Baltimore.

Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walls, Miss Mary Chance, and Mrs. Alan Walls, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Albert Chance in Philadelphia. On their way home Sunday evening they stopped for a short visit with Mr. and Mrs. Loomis Wise at New Castle, Del.

The Queen Anne's County Homemaker's Clubs, which held their annual all-day meeting in Cox Hall last Tuesday, was certainly well attended. About 150 members were present and enjoyed the days program.

Mr. Charles B. Chance spent last week in Philadelphia with his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Chance.

Mr. and Mrs. William T. Roe and daughter, Helen, of Salisbury, were the guests over the week-end of their families in town. On Saturday Mr. Roe, accompanied by Mr. Lloyd Gale, of Crumpton, motored up near West Chester, Pa., and enjoyed a day's hunting with some friends.

Mrs. Harry Jones, of Baltimore, who spent the week-end with her aunt, Mrs. May Sparks in Crumpton, visited with friends in town Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Hilton Robinson and son, Bruce, of near Washington, D. C., were the week-end guests of Mrs. Robinson's father, Mr. Medford Roe.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kenton and daughter, Miss Harriett Kenton, of Washington, D. C., spent the week-end with Mrs. Kenton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Stevens, near town. They were accompanied to Sudlersville by Mrs. Mary Cooper Harriman, of Arlington, Va., who spent the time with Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Walls.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Webster entertained at dinner on Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Walbert and their family. This dinner was given in honor of Mr. Webster, who celebrated a birthday on Saturday.

STARR

Mr. and Mrs. William Foster and son Billy of Boothwyn, Pa., were the week-end guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Foster.

Mrs. Louise Hollingsworth was taken to Emergency Hospital, Easton one day last week, where she underwent an operation. Her many friends wish her a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Norman McQuay of Bozman spent several days this week as the guests of Mrs. McQuay's mother, Mrs. Rena Adams.

Mr. and Mrs. William Adams and children of Quarryville, Pa., were the Saturday guests of his mother, Mrs. Rena Adams.

The farmers' wives in this section are only going to sell a few of their turkeys. As the price is so cheap. They think the Christmas market may be better.

One of our old residents was heard to remark, "It sure is a shame, the way the thieves are stealing folks fowl in this section. They have to work so hard to raise them, but the thieves only raise them off the roost." "No trouble at all, but a great deal of trouble for them if they can only be caught."

PRICE

Mrs. Steve Bostic and children spent Sunday with her brother and family, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Cannon, of Ingleside.

Mr. Lyle Appleford of New York enjoyed the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Appleford and also attended the Navy-Columbia game at the Naval Academy on Saturday.
