July 21.

From Newfoundland.

By captain Snow, arrived here in the Harlequin, from Liverpool (N. S.) we learn the capture of the French islands of St. Peters and Miquelon, with seven sail of merchantmen, two of the ships loaded with fish and oil for France A shallop, with fifteen men, who had escaped, and were bound to Boston, were taken by a [illegible] out of Liverpool, and sent to Halifax.

On Monday colonel Humphreys, late ambassador at Lisbon, and family, arrived in town from the southward.

PHILADELPHIA, July 25.

We learn that at the democratic meeting held at Wray's garden, Northern Liberties, agreeable to notice, on Saturday afternoon, much confusion and riot took place. Some time after the appointed hour of meeting, Manuel Eyre, esq. was called to the chair, as being chairman of the last meeting, and of course entitled to preside at this meeting, being an adjourned one. This call produced a violent opposition from the opponents of the Rising Sun party who called for another chairman, a Mr. Mac Mullin of Southwark—after considerable jaring and quarrelling, Mr. Eyre took the chair, which was placed on a carpenter's work bench for the purpose of being elevated. The friends of Mr. Eyre surrounded the chair, determined to support it against the violence and fury of their assailants. The assailants finding they could not succeed in pushing down the chairman, determined to dethrone him by more violent means. A lately created justice of the peace called out to his friends, saying, "Come, my lads, we'll do for them," and with that, thirty or more seized hold of the work bench, turned it over with all those who were on it, and threw them on the ground, where they lay extended "full many a rod"—The bench and the chair were broken in pieces and entirely destroyed—But another chair was procured and Mr. Eyre placed therein.—The parties then divided, the justice and his friends on the one side and the Rising Sun party on the other side of the garden; a committee of five from the general ward committee of the city was then introduced to each party, to endeavor if possible to accommodate differences, and each party appointed a committee of 5 for this purpose—but we understand that this congress of conciliation, after a long debate, adjourned to Thursday next, without having done any thing. We have not learned what other business, if any, was done, but understand that throughout it was a scene of battle, riot and confusion. An eye-witness observed to us, that the town meeting lately held in the city on the subject of the board of health, was an orderly decent meeting compared to this, for in that there was only a disposition for a row, but here, there was a complete row. This is but an imperfect sketch; as such we give it—hoping the public will be gratified with a more detailed account.

On Friday morning last, nine sharks were caught with a hook and line, at the end of the Fly-market wharf, New-York. The largest measured eight and a half feet long.

NORFOLK, July 21.

By the barque America, capt, Hipkins, 13 days from Antigua, we learn, that the troops destined for the attack on Tobago left there on the 2d July for Barbados, where they were to join a reinforcement preparing for the same expedition. On the 4th July information was received at Antigua that a fleet of 14 sail of ships of war (among which were several of the line) had arrived at Barbados, with five regiments, under command of general Moore.

Entered, barque America, Hipkins, Antigua; schooner Eliza, Ferguson, Baltimore.

FEDERAL GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, July 26.

We yesterday gave the names of five of the eight unfortunate persons drowned on Sunday—the following are the names of the other three:

William Harman,
Daniel M'Clasky,
Catharine Dwyer.

The president of the United States left Washington for Monticello, on Tuesday last.

Solemn warning to Smugglers!

The federal court of the state of South Carolina has fined John Lowe, jeweller of Charleston, 400 dollars, for smuggling various articles of jewelry; which were also forfeited and sold at public auction for 4,305 dollars 40 cents. He is also by law "Disabled from holding any office of trust or profit, under the United States, for a term not exceeding seven years."

It appears by a paragraph under the Boston head, that the vice-president, the same who was honored with the Rogues March at a late festival at Fell's Point, and general S. Smith, are journeying on to the capital of Massachusetts. We learn that general Pinckney, the hon. Gouverneur Morris, Colonel Humphreys, the hon. J. Rutledge, the hon. T. Pickering, and the hon. John Adams, are also there. We are happy to find our general at last getting into such good company. A reformation may be expected.

Some of Mr. Mac Creery's pretended friends appear by yesterday's American, to be much miffed at the laconic manner in which we noticed the pompous annunciation of his consent to represent this important portion of the union in congress, for the next two sessions; or per-adventure, much longer, if it should meet with his consent! Now we cannot say that we are thoroughly penetrated with contrition at the liberty we have taken, inasmuch as the annunciation appeared without authority either from the First Consul or any inferior commander of the people. Indeed from its appearing in a different phraseology in the different papers, and from its outrage upon truth and common sense, and especially from its having been, unlike the First Consul's bulletin, immediately discontinued, there was room to suspect that the whole might be a mere hum of the printers themselves—an impudent burlesque, or at least a scandalum magnatum, for which they might be brought before their betters. In truth, those who are acquainted with the moderation, modesty and unobtrusive life of Mr. Mac Creery, must well know that he would never give his consent to supply the officially declared deficiencies of his intended colleague, Mr. N. R. Moore—and that some wicked wit had been after wounding his sensibility, by the silly paragraph in question. It is therefore to be hoped that the real friends of this gentleman will drag the author before the public and inflict the punishment his temerity deserves; and that the true friends of the people, and the people themselves, will not in future be cajoled by the misapplied terms "undeviating republican principles—extensive mercantile information," and so forth, and so forth—but judge for themselves.

Some may think it odd that we Feds should call general Smith our general. We must refer all such to the writings of some officious scribbler who has been insulting both Mr. Mac Creery and the public in Saturday's and yesterday's American; and says that "the loss of general Smith, or any other man will not destroy unanimity, (a bull, by the bye)—for we contend for principle, not men"—As much as to say they have lost the general, but that he is destitute of principle and therefore not worth contending for. And further, that his loss, and, by the same parity of reasoning, the loss of one half their numbers would not destroy unanimity!! The same writer candidly remarks that "the lies and slanders (of the feds) are mere gleanings; at least in point of quantity!" No one will doubt the fact, who has heard of such able sowers and plentiful reapers as Duane, Cheetham and their followers and gatherers in the field of politics.

From the Philadelphia Gazette.

We have received a few numbers of Cobbett's Weekly Register for May. In one of the 14th May we find, among a mass of remarks on the politics of the country, some very passionate observations on the principles of stock jobbing in London, and on the influence which France possesses in consequence thereof. Alluding to the impositions passed on the mayor, &c. he proceeds: "What must we think of a nation which has been disturbed to the remotest corners of its territory, by a mere waggish trick played off on the mayor of one of its cities, and a second time by a paragraph in one of its newspapers? These are most alarming symptoms. They prove the body politic to be in a state of fearful feebleness. Its nerves are shattered. It starts and trembles at every report. The events of the last week have, we fear, stamped the character of the British public forever, or at least till some great and strong, and perhaps violent remedy, be adopted for the cure of the money-loving malady, which now weighs us down to the earth. What that remedy will be, or whence to come, we know not; but this we venture to assert, that England cannot, with its present feelings, long continue to be an independent nation. Our readers will do us the justice to acknowledge, that we long ago predicted that it would be on the side of the funds which France would first attack us. We then stated, that, with our present funded debt, it was impossible to maintain public credit, while there was a power who could raise and sink our funds at its pleasure. It is absolutely impossible; and therefore that debt must be destroyed, or we must by some means or other get rid of that menacing power, which France has acquired over us, and which she now exercises with so much address and insolence on her part, and with so much folly and cowardice on ours."

The sanative properties of oxigen are every day becoming more manifest. M. Valli, professor of chymistry at Mantua, has discovered, that by oxydating meat-broth, it will acquire such powerful anti-putrescent property, as to keep sweet, for six months. M. Moscati, of Milan, hung a piece of flesh in the sun, until it became putrid; he then oxydated it and kept it for ten days, when it fell to pieces, but it had become so sweet as not to occasion any ill taste to the water in which it was boiled. Flesh of any kind, rubbed in powdered charcoal may be recovered from a state of putridity. [London paper.]

Died in Rahway, last week, a young woman, who, about the 8th May last, was bitten by a mad dog. She had all the symptoms of a canine madness, though at times seemed to possess so much reason as to caution her attendants to be careful lest she should bite them, as she felt a strong propensity to it. The hydrophobia was so great, that at the sight of water she would be horribly convulsed, and appeared as if she was in the agony of death. She died in all the horror peculiar to the malady, to the poignant distress of surviving friends and relatives.

[New-Jersey Journal.]

The reason of intrusting the executive branch of the government to a single person is, that greater promptitude, spirit, vigour and decision may be reasonably expected in one man than in many. In such a case all the sinews of government are knit together, and united in his hand and may be called into action at once, with all the force which they can derive from unity of design and exertion. This is the thing in which mixed governments have a decided advantages over all others. They have all the force and activity of a monarchy without the dangers of despotic governments, or the laxity and indecision of those merely popular. Should it, however, be the misfortune of a mixed government, to have its executive fall into the hands of a man at once timid, undecided and feeble, not only all those benefits are lost, for the time being, but it is much the worse for the mixture; since it has all the vices and corrupt patronage incidental to monarchy without the advantage of its energy.—Whether this be the case with America at this time, we leave to the readers.

UNFORTUNATE OCCURRENCE.

John Dolton, of Springfield township, was committed to the jail of this county on Sunday last, to take his trial at the court of Oyer and Terminer for killing Amos Holburd. On the 29th June, the deceased and Dolton were hoeing together, when a dispute arose between them, the origin of which is not known. After disputing a while, Holburd went to a coal pit, about 100 rods from Mr. Town's, and Dolton followed him; here a scuffle ensued; the deceased threw Dolton, and held him until he promised to be quiet—he then let him up and went round the coal pit. Dolton addressing himself to the brother of the deceased, said "he would have satisfaction," and followed the unfortunate Holburd round the pit, who, in attempting to keep Dolton off, struck him with his hoe. The prisoner immediately seized another hoe which lay near, and a number of blows were exchanged between them; one of which from Dolton knocked Holburd down. When he lay in this situation, the brother of the deceased begged Dolton not to strike his brother again, as he had already killed him; this was twice repeated; but Dolton walked round him, and raising his hoe, struck him on the side of his head. Whether the last, or a preceding blow, was mortal, is not certainly known; but one of them broke the skull of Holburd. He languished in extreme paine until Wednesday the 6th instant, when he expired.
