LONDON, August 4.

Middlesex County Meeting.

A meeting of the freeholders of Middlesex was held yesterday at Hackney to vote an address to his majesty. Mr. Alderman Skinner moved the address in a truly British speech. Sir Francis Burdett attended the meeting, and was very properly questioned upon his speech at the crown and anchor on Friday last.* Called upon in a pointed manner by Alderman Curtis, sir Francis entered into an explanation of that speech; his explation, we believe, convinced every person present, that the reports in the newspapers of the proceedings at the crown and anchor, had not been unfaithful. Never was a speech received with more expressions of indignation, than sir Francis's yesterday, and never was indignation more merited.

It had been moved, that the sheriffs of Middlesex should present the address to his majesty, accompanied by the county members, Mr. Byng and sir F. Burdett. After the latter, however, had entered into an explanation of his speech on Friday, it was proposed, and unanimously resolved, that his name should be left out of the motion, and that the address should be presented by the sheriffs and by Mr. Byng only—a more marked disapprobation of the conduct of a member was never given by the constituents of any man that was ever sent to parliament.

Mr. Byng came forward and delivered his sentiments to the meeting. It, on every occasion, afforded him pleasure, to meet his constituents. Even on occasions when the subjects under consideration gave rise to much diversity of opinion, he had felt this sentiment. How much more strong this feeling now was, after the unanimity which had prevailed, and was likely to prevail, it was unnecessary for him to declare. He had, from the moment of his first entrance on public life, been in opposition to his majesty's ministers. He knew not whether the habits of his life might not leave him in opposition during what yet remained of his public career. Of this, he was at least certain, that he should never cease to look at the conduct of ministers with a proper degree of constitutional jealousy. The present was, however, a moment when he thought that all opposition ought to cease, when all party spirit ought to be extinguished, when all ought to unite heart and hand for the salvation of the country. Whatever weight attached to his opinions, was derived from the partiality and kindness of those whom he now addressed. They had placed him in the situation which was equal to the utmost extent of his ambition. He should, therefore, be a traitor to their cause, if he did not express such sentiments. He had no difficulty, therefore, in declaring, that even in the worst times of our history, even when the people were debarred the constitutional privilege of meeting to remonstrate against abuses and corruption, even under the suspension of the habeas corpus act, even if he had been in fetters, he should have felt it his duty to have employed his very chains as an instrument of offence against a foreign foe.—(This truly British sentiment drew down thunders of applause.)—He concluded, by calling the attention of the meeting to the nature of the foe. The gentleman who threatened us with destruction, did not even use the common decency of an invader. He held out no prospect of the redress of our grievances. He did not flatter us with the hope of the establishment of that degree of liberty now existing in France. (A general laugh.) He did not hold out to the most unprincipled and nefarious of mankind, the hope of a distribution of property, which he meant to reserve for himself and the banditti by whom he may be accompanied. The hon. gentleman concluded this neat speech, which was received with enthusiasm, by expressing his entire approbation of the address.

After a vote of thanks to Mr. Alderman Skinner, Mr. Roberts, and Mr. Sheriff Walsh, the meeting dispersed.

* In this speech, he asserted, "That it was impossible for an honest man to lend an assisting arm, in the defence of the country."

The ship Brothers, Hall, in 36 days from Liverpool, arrived at this port yesterday. She left Liverpool on the 14th of August, but brings no later London papers that were received by the Frances-Henrietta.

It appears that the blockade of the Elbe is eluded to a considerable degree in the following manner: Vessels pass to and from Hamburg and Tonningen. Those arriving at the latter place unload and send their cargoes in small craft through shallow channels.

A number of young English ladies, who had been at boarding school at Rouen, were prevented embarking from Calais on their return; the first consul desiring that they might be detained till the English government sent back Master & Miss Lapagerie, nephew and niece to Madame Bonaparte, who are prisoners in England.

Sixteen transports had arrived at the Motherbank from Alexandria, via Malta and Gibraltar, with the 8th, 23d, 25th and 48th regiment and the 26th of dragoons.

Schimmelpennink, it was said, was to be placed at the head of the Batavian government.

Accounts from Copenhagen stated that the Danish court had directed its minister at London to protest against any Danish vessels being brought into English ports.

Signals were established along the coast of England, between the forces on shore and the ships of war, by which means immediate notice could be given of an enemy's approach. Chains of signal posts were erected to establish communication, and the steeples of churches were converted into signal towers.

M. Matthieusen, one of the principal merchants of Hamburg, has been dispatched to London, being commissioned by the government to make representations to the British court respecting the blockade of the Elbe.

Persons are daily apprehended on suspicion of being spies for the French; some of whom, it is said, have been detected taking the soundings of the channel along the coast: others on suspicion of being concerned in the Irish insurrection. Every day (says a London paper) some latent branch of the conspiracy is discovered through the confessions of prisoners implicated in that desperate undertaking, and every day shews the extent and alarming nature of the combination.

The Correspondent (the Hamburgh official paper) of July 1st, says, that the amount paid by the Hanoverians to support the French troops quartered among them, is at the rate of 210,000 rix dollars per month, and had been nearly in that proportion ever since the French took possession of Hanover.

FEDERAL GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 23.

Extract of a letter from an American gent'leman in London, under date of 4th August, 1803, to his friend in New-York.

"London and Westminster will have 100,000 troops. There are at least that number exercised four hours every day. The public squares and church-yards in many parishes are occupied for the purpose of training them. In three months this country will have an effective force of one million of men. If France does not attack very soon, her own sea-port towns will be laid waste. They already talk of forming an army of France, to meet that of England upon the continent. This force will not be less than 200,000, and mostly volunteers. Let the invasion be on which side it may, the conflict will be dreadful."

Extract of a letter from John M. Forbes, esquire, American consul at Hamburg, to a commercial house in New-York, dated July 20th.

"The navigation of the Elbe being at present impeded by blockade, our market must be supplied through other channels; and of these the most convenient in every point of view is the port of Lubeck. From this port heavy goods may be bro't to this city very conveniently by the river Steckenitz, and lighter goods may be transported at a very small expence by land. The harbor of Travemunde, where large vessels generally unload, is perfectly safe; and vessels drawing no more than ten feet water can come quite up to the city of Lubeck. The whole charges of receiving and forwarding goods to this place, including duties paid at the Sound, do not amount on an average to two per cent. and the stade and admiralty duties payable on importations by the Elbe, and saved on most articles by the manner now adopted, exceed this rate. Thus it is presumed goods may be got here, at nearly the same expence, except the difference of sea-freight and insurance, as by the Elbe. Lubeck possesses another great advantage in the supply of Russian goods, which are always to be procured at prices very little advanced, and sometimes (as has lately been the case) even lower than at St. Petersburg. Under these circumstances, although I have no idea that the blockade of our river can be of long duration, I have thought it prudent to make an arrangement with Messrs. Schmidt and Plessing, to receive and forward any goods which may be consigned to me. They have very respectable connexions, and transact business with as much reputation as any house in that city. I have also agents at Tonningen and at Bremen; so that property consigned to me, and coming to either of these ports, will be duly protected. I shall also be able to give it my personal attention."

Whoever takes up said negro, shall receive ten dollars, if taken within the city or precincts of Baltimore; twenty dollars if taken within forty miles of this city, and the above reward if taken out of the state, and all reasonable charges for bringing him home.

50 Dollars Reward.

RAN away on Saturday morning, the 17th instant, from the subscriber, living in Anne-Arundel county, state of Maryland, near Richard Owings's mill, a negro man named SAM, who is a professor of the Methodist religion, but is a great lyar and eye-servant; is about five feet six or seven inches high, twenty-six years of age, strong and very bow-legged, and has lost the sight of his right eye when a child, by a splinter, which is discovered only by a minute examination, as the ball has not sunk. He has a down look when spoken to about his misconduct, and does not answer questions very readily. He chews tobacco, and commonly carries a large quid in the right side of his mouth, which makes his cheek appear swelled. He is a tolerable good waggoner and ploughman, and went off in his common working dress, but has changed his clothes, which cannot be described, (except a brown broad-cloth coat) as they have been kept where his wife lives, but are now taken away. He crossed the ferry at Elk-Ridge on Sunday morning; and as he has relations in the city of Baltimore, and a number of acquaintances, I expect he is lurking about it. From enquiries made of the ferrymen, it is very probable he will endeavor to pass for a man liberated by the Snowden family, and may have a pass for that purpose.

Whoever apprehends said fellow, and secures him in gaol, so that I get him again, shall receive Twenty five Dollars, if apprehended in any part of the state; and if out of the state, the above reward, paid by

HENRY RIDGELY, of Henry.

N. B. All masters of vessels and others are forewarned from harboring, concealing or carrying off said fellow, as the law will be enforced against such offenders. H. R.
