Correspondence of the Baltimore Transcript.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18. 1837.

The scene of those inflammatory topics—the Abolition and Texas questions—was to-day shifted from the House to the Senate, producing there one of the most animated discussions ever witnessed within its walls. A memorial from some persons in New Jersey against the annexation of Texas, presented by Mr. Wall of that State, was the first circumstance that gave rise to the exciting scenes that followed. Mr. Preston moved to have it laid on the table, and accompanied his motion with denouncing bitterly the bringing before Congress such papers, and notifying the Senate of his intention to introduce a measure having for its object the annexation of Texas to the United States' territory. The motion to lay on the table prevailed. The sensitiveness evinced by Mr. Preston on this matter, served to pitch the feelings of the other Southern Senators, to a similar tone, which at once manifested itself, when Mr. Wall presented a petition from his State, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. Mr. Grundy moved to lay it on the table. Mr. Preston having called for the question whether it should be received, a debate of deep interest took place, in which every Senator seemed to think himself bound to participate. The question resolved itself into the right of petition, Messrs. Clay and Davis were the most conspicuous supporters of the prinple that the right of petition is inviolation, and laboured to show that most of the excitement now existing among the people at the North upon this subject, was not o much from a support of Abolition, as the result of their supposing this said right to be threatened and taken from them. They thought the best plan to appease this ferment of the public mind would be to refer the petitions to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

This principle was most violently opposed by Messrs. Calhonn, Preston, Strange, Buchanan and others, who insisted upon the gross injury to the interests of the South that would result from its being put into practice. Mr. Preston's manner and words were especially significant. He said, the South looked to Congress for protection in such an emergency, and if that was refused, it would protect itsslf, for the accomplishment of which, the proper measures would be at once resorted to. There was no noise or anger in the dilivery of such remarks as these at the close of his speech, but all was selemnity and cool earnestness. Mr. King, of Alabama, in some excited remarks, observed that he had been at the North recently and had seen how the abolition feeling was industriously fanned by certain political knaves and demagogues, and was made use of for party purposes. Mr. Davis, of Mass. in reply said that if such were the cace, the feeling was confined to no particular party,—and indeed one may see in the Senate itself how this question will divide the ranks of the opposite parties there. Mr. Clay in reply to some heated observations from Mr. Calhoun upon the prospect of discussion from the agitation of the Abolition question, poured out one of his gloving bursts of eloquence upon the stability of our institution which seemed for a time to efface the subject of debate from every Senator's mind. It was a theme on which patriots of all parties could have but one common feeling.

Mr. Grundy's motion to lay the petition on the table was finally carried—25 ayes—20 noes.

In the House nothing of interest occurred save that Mr. Briggs of Mass. resigned his seat in the Committee of Ways and Means, where he had been appointed to succeed his colleague, Mr. Fletcher.

Yours, M.

The Charleston Mercury says, that when ever Mr. Adams denounces a measure it is a sign of something good, as the South may be sure that he will oppose any for which it expresses a desire.

"He declares in his speech recently published" says the Mercury "that the measures of the Administration are all Southern measures—that the suspension of payment of the 4th instalment of the surplus, was eminently Southern—and that the divorce was to propitiate the Nullifiers. The speech of Mr. Adam's will raise more recruits in the South, for the policy of the Administration, than his prophetic speech did for Texas, and that was a greater boon to the young republic, than she ever had from her warmest advocates in this confederacy.

The Fredericksburg 'Arena,' (opp.) in the course of some remarks on the politics of South Carolina, which it considers impersonated in Mr. Calhoun, says, that with respect to the existing Administration, the tone of the press of that State within four months past, indicates a revolution in public sentiment, the most sudden and most thorough. The 'Arena,' before twelve months are over, will probably be called upon to express its convictions of other changes in public opinion of the same character.
