The First Class at West Point.

A dispatch from West Point, N. Y., to the Baltimore Sun, says: The cruiser Annapolis, with the first class of the Naval Academy on board, dropped anchor opposite the reading hall early Sunday morning. Fifty-nine future admirals waved their handkerchiefs at the hundreds of white-trousered cadets who cheered them from the bluff. Adjutant W. C. Rivers was rowed to the ship and informed Captain Ingersoll that Acting Superintendent Hein had placed the freedom of the post at the disposal of himself and his officers and cadets. Captain Ingersoll went ashore and lunched with Colonel Hein. The middies were not allowed to go ashore until afternoon. The military lads went to meet them, and soon sounds of hilarity were heard. The Annapolis was found spick and span. The ship had received a new coat of paint. The Annapolis had no stiff gales to weather since leaving here six weeks ago, when the cadets could not land on account of an epidemic of scarlatina. They were greatly disappointed, but Captain Ingersoll promised that if the epidemic should die out, he would bring the lads back again.

An entertainment was given the visiting cadets Monday afternoon, and at night a hop was tendered them in Memorial Hall. On Tuesday night the camp was decorated and illuminated in honor of the guests. On Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Bruff gave the cadets a reception at her house.

The Annapolis was to leave West Point yesterday (Wednesday).

Court met Tuesday morning, and transacted the following business:

The first account of Helen S. Cecil, executrix of Leonidas Cecil was passed.

A release from Avaline Johnson to C. S. Johnson, administrator of John W. Thompson, was filed.

The Court sustained the will of William Smith, colored, deciding in favor of Sarah Pointer, beneficiary. A caveat and petition was filed by D. R. Magruder on the part of Moses and Hattie Smith, children of William Smith, claiming that by reason of unsound mind he was incapacitated from making a will, and that undue influence had been practiced. Judge Magruder, for the caveators, will appeal to the Court of Appeals.
