Dear Sir:—

We had considerable trouble at the start to find enough evidence of the old survey to start with. We had a half mad effort in orienting the old line for several miles in both direction for hub without success. Cutting up in the timber were laced & in abandoned fields we found a few stakes, most of which had rotted off at the ground line. In the woods the stakes seems to have rotted entirely, of course in cultivated fields all evidence has gone. We found six stakes near the lie in point & from them we run the old line for sufficient [illegible] that we were closely check-
