SATURDAY MORNING.....FEB. 9, 1884.

GOING IN DEBT.

The worst mistake the farmer makes, especially at the start, is going too heavily in debt. It seems that on this point farmers are not willing to take the experience of others. Although they need but to look around them to see the mistake others have made in this particular, though they have been warned time and again by their best friends, the agricultural press, yet they seem to think they will fare better than others have done. They do not take into account the very many things that may come to pass which will be against them. In short, they will not take the experience of others as a guide in this matter and only a bitter personal experience will teach them the lesson; and even then it is somewhat difficult for them to appreciate fully the true cause, but they often imagine that other things were the prime cause, and going in debt only the secondary one of their failure.

The great trouble is "that time waits for no man." Hot or cold, wet or dry, whether the seasons and crops are good or bad, pay day is sure to come, and sometimes when a man is sorely pressed time seems to fly away.

A man comes along with a new machine of some kind to sell. He is a good talker and will give the farmer six months or a year to pay in. A year seems a long time. "I can surely make that much money in that time," thinks the farmer, and the purchase is made. Almost before the farmer is aware of it the time has gone and the note is due. The farmer has not the money and the note begins to draw interest.

I know of a farmer who was once in good circumstances. He got in debt a little at the stores for different articles for his family. He bought several articles of farm machinery on credit, expecting to pay out of his wheat crop. That year wheat was a failure. So far his farm was clear and well stocked, he had plenty and could have got along without going in debt a dollar, by simply economizing a little, but the debts had been made and when the time of payment came he had no money. Then he thought, "Well, I can borrow a thousand dollars on my farm and pay off all these little debts, and have something left over to live on next year until I can make a crop. I can get the money for five years at ten per cent., and one hundred dollars is not very much for me to make on my farm and I can easily pay the interest."

So the money was borrowed and the mortgage given.

At the end of the first year everything seemed to have gone wrong, and he could not pay the interest.

"Never mind," said the creditor, "the note is a compound interest one, and as long as I am safe I will wait."

This was easy enough. Next year he would be more careful, would surely pay up.

But his crops failed to come up to what he had expected. He had gone in debt at the stores, the blacksmith shop and at other places. These men wanted their money, while the man that held the mortgage would wait.

At the end of four years there still stood the mortgage, no interest paid, and the amount growing larger every day.

To him there seemed but one course, and that was to save himself while he could. He sold his farm for all it would bring and went West to make a new start. Going in debt was a bitter lesson to him, but he learned by experience.

How many farmers have not had something of the same experience? Traders and dealers are always ready to credit you while you are good, but just as soon as you get in a pinch just when your crops are lightest and the prices lowest; in fact, just when it seems hardest for you, then it is when they want their money. And how often you get it at a serious sacrifice! The man who buys on credit, from one year's end to another, cannot possibly make the money that the one does who pays as he goes along. The cash farmer has all the advantage in buying and selling. He can buy where he can get the lowest price, and sell when he chooses and to whom he pleases.

The ready cash will buy almost everything at a lower price than credit. Any farmer who has given the matter a fair trial knows this. Then when they are not in debt you can take all the advantages of the market. A few cents on the bushel in a crop of wheat or corn often means the profit, and where anything of a crop is raised is no small item. The credit farmer must sell as soon as his crop is ready for market, whether the price is high or low, while the man who is out of debt can sell when it suits him.

—J. N. Shepherd, in South and West.

A CLERGYMAN'S STORY OF HIS LIFE.—Rev. Robert Collyer, in a recent sermon, gave the following story of his life: "Thirty-four years ago I was working at a blacksmith's forge, in England. My prospects were dark, and I looked towards America. My ideal future was not a great one. I only wanted a place where I could have a little home of my own, with books to read, and the chance to educate my children. I remember I pictured to myself some quiet little cottage in a Pennsylvania village, where I should live with my wife and children yet to come. I think I counted seven children me if—but then, but the Lord has given me more. In my picture I painted a pretty fr— and plenty of books, and a garden. I— my desires to my friends. They all tried to dissuade me from them. They offered— letters to get work everywhere but in America. At last I started, and as I expected, when I got here I found every one to help me along. At my first Thanksgiving dinner I had a great turkey smoking on the table—a bird, when in England, I no more thought I should ever eat of than I did of reaching the American eagle. The Lord prospered me beyond my wildest expectations."

AN old celery grower writes that there are two causes for rust on celery. One is too great exposure to the sun, the other is earthing up or hoeing when the ground or the plant is moist with rain or dew. A cool, moist situation is best for celery, and a little shade is no disadvantage. Earthing up should be done when the weather and everything about the plant is dry. A cause of both rust and rot is the entrance of earth between the stalks during the process of earthing up, and this is very apt to be the case with celery of a tall, blanching variety.

PEAR trees are much more apt to grow tall and spindle than apple trees. They often grow so tall that it is next to impossible to secure the fruit from the extreme top. To cut back the main trunk when the tree is old is not commonly advisable. The evil is best remedied by preventing the tall growth when the tree is young by cutting off the central shoot.

A GOOD BIT OF PASTRY — the roll of honor.

IRISH HUMOR.

"I engaged," said a burley lawyer, "a chaise at Galway to conduct me some few miles into the country, and had proceeded some distance, when it came to a sudden standstill at the beginning of a rather steep incline, and the coachman leaping to the ground, came to the door and opened it. 'What are you at, man? This is not where I ordered you to stop. Has the animal ribbed?' 'Whisht, yer honor, whisht!' said Paddy in an undertone. 'I'm only desaving the sly baste, I'll just bang the door; and the crafty ould cratur will think he's intire got rid of yer honor's splendid form, and he'll be at the top of the hill in no time.'"

On the edge of a small river in the County of Cavan, in Ireland, there is—or use to be—a stone with the following inscription cut upon it, no doubt intended for the information of strangers traveling that way: "N. B.—When this stone is out of sight it is not safe to ford the river." Even the above is almost if not quite surpased by the famous post erected a few years since by the surveyors of the Kent roads, in England: "This is the bridle-path to Faversham. If you can't read this you had better keep to the main road." We are also reminded of a debate which took place in the Irish House of commons in 1795, on the leather tax, in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir John Plunkett, observed with great emphasis: "That in the prosecution of the present war every man ought to give his last guinea to protect the remainder." Mr. Vandaleur added: "However that might be the tax on leather would be severely felt by the bare-footed peasantry of Ireland." To which Sir B. Roche replied that "this could be easily remedied by making the under-leathers of wood."

A Puzzle.

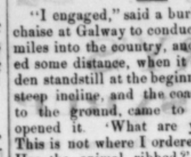
Get your box of matches and place fifteen of them on the table, making this figure:



Then say to the company: "There you see five perfect squares; take away three matches only, and leave three perfect squares." And now is a good time to study characters; some some will see it at a glance, others look a little while, don't see it, and lose interest in it; others don't see it, and insist on being told the solution; others again don't see it for some time, but stick to it till they do find it out. If you want any work done give it to the latter: they are the kind you can depend upon. Of course you see what matches to remove, the two lower ones on the lower left hand corner, and the center one on the top row, leaving a figure like this, having three perfect squares.

A Leather Wedding.

She—"My dear, how long do people have to be married before they can have a tin-wedding?"

He—"Ten years."

She—"Mercy me! Why, we can't have a tin-wedding for seven years yet!

He—"No, but there are plenty of other weddings that come between. For instance, the first year there is a cotton-wedding, the second year a paper wedding, the third year a leather wedding, and—"

She—"A what?"

He—"A leather wedding."

She—"Well, I declare; and why is there a leather wedding the third year?"

He—"I don't know, unless it is because the first born is by that time getting old enough to be fanned with a slipper."—Philadelphia Call.

HE "FOOLED DE NIGGER."—"See here, Jim—you hypocritical old rascal—what did you stop and ask that nigger for a chaw of tobacco for when you had that whole plug I gave you in your coat pocket?"

"Why, Boss, dat is nothin' but a nigger's way of dodgin' round de debil. You see I know'd dat nigger gwine to ax me for 'bacca and I wasn't gwine to tell dat nigger a lie about it for I belongs to church, I does, an' so I ax dat nigger for 'bacca to keep him from axin' me for some. Didn't you hear him say he didn't have any, and was gwine to ax me for some? Yah! yah! yah! how I did fool dat nigger! You see, Boss, 'cause you gib me dat baccа I ain't gwine to gib it away to nobody, for dat would be 'busin' your confidence."

THE small boy who hangs around the parlor and makes faces at his sister's beau should be punished for contempt of court. —Burlington Press.
