OCEAN BIRD GUANO!

Office of T. R. HUBBARD & SON,
Manufacturers of "Hubbard's Standard" and "Extant Bone Superphosphate,"
And Sole Proprietors and Importers of O. B. GUANO.

SEE ANALYSIS:

Measrs. T. R. HUBBARD & SON:—Sample of your OCEAN BIRD GUANO sent me gives the following result:
Moisture Det. at 100.....10.40
Alkaline Salts.....1.12
Organic matter.....13.34
Capable of producing Ammo.....0.03
Inorganic matter.....26.50
Bone Phos. of Lime undecomposed.....13.51
Containing Nitric Acid.....0.57
G. A. LEBIG.

The above Guano was introduced here last Spring and nearly 200 tons were used by our best farmers with satisfactory results. As an application to PEACH TREES it is unsurpassed. As soon by the analysis it contains a very large per cent. of available Bone Phosphate, and yet there is a large per cent. of undecomposed Bone to benefit the after crops. We have already taken numerous orders from our largest and most successful PEACH GROWERS, who mix it half and half with Kainit, and sow it broadcast and plow it in. Those desiring to try it will do well to send in their orders early, as our supply will be limited unless our next cargo arrives in time for Spring use.

On T. R. HUBBARD & SON:—Gentlemen: In reply, as to the action of your O. B. Guano on our orchards we can only say that it was entirely satisfactory. Last Spring we purchased of you 37 tons Kainit and 5 tons O. B. Guano, and sowed it on our peach orchards, the latter being sowed on the 10th of March. We mixed the Guano one-third to two-thirds Kainit and applied the mixture to the trees as usual. The result was a decided difference in the favor, perceptible to several of our neighbors, in the trees as well as fruit. In past applications to our orchards we have always preferred Fish Guano, but are frank to say that we regard your O. B. Guano as THE BEST PEACH MANURE WE HAVE EVER USED, and shall require 12 or 15 tons to apply next month.

S. M. WILKINS.

SAMPLES AND PRICES of our O. B. GUANO can be seen at our office, and will be pleased to furnish it to the trade either from Factory at Chestertown or warehouse in Baltimore.

The following lines were composed by the Rev. N. B. Cobb, of Fayetteville, N. C., some years ago, in reply to Gray's Elegy, and went the rounds of the secular press of that State.
They are a reply to the sentiment expressed by the poet Gray, in that oft repeated stanza:
"Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear,
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

No ocean gem of purest ray serene
Is scattered on the deep to perish there;
No flower on earth is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

The eye of man may not behold that gem,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear,
His keenest sense nor e'er the sweet perfume
That true divinity upon the desert air.

Still not one spark of that gem is lost,
For out one breath of fragrance from the rose,
And round about it is a countless host
Who in their splendor revel or repose.

Those "dark unfathomed caves" of ocean deep
Are not so dark as poets sometimes write,
There myriad moving, mingling waters creep,
And doleful to them all that gem is bright.

Within the caverns of the grain of sand,
A thousand living things, fed by God's hand,
That true divinity upon the desert air.

And still, if it is a creature wondrous where
Is scattered on the deep to perish there,
The great Creator, God, who placed them there,
Who gave delight in works his hands have made.

Think not thy worth and work are all unknown
Because no partial peasant paints thy praise,
Men may not see thy mind, but God will own
Thy worth and works and thoughts and words and ways.

The desert rose, though never seen by man,
Is scattered on the deep to perish there;
The ocean gem, though never seen by man,
Is ever brilliant in the eyes of God.

GRAY'S ELEGY.

"Do!" said Miriam, laughing to herself as she thought of Aunt Jane.

He swung the ladder promptly up against the trunk of the tree.

"Now, it's all right," said he. "I'll just go over to see that the dogs haven't frightened Mrs. Morey's young turkeys, and wait for you outside the woods."

In five minutes Miriam Green was by his side, rosy and breathless, still clinging to her apron of mistletoe.

"Oh, I am so much obliged to you,"
said she, earnestly.

"It was rather an awkward predic-ment wasn't it?" smiled he.

"What will Aunt Jane say?" said
Miriam, involuntarily.

"She'll be very much alarmed, won't she?"

"No," confessed Miriam. "She—that is—Oh, Mr. Ford, I can't deceive you about it."

And she told him all.

"Of course, it was very wrong to disobey her," she added, "but—"

"Frightened her?" said he. "My sweet little Miriam!"

"I was passing her strong arm around her waist,
and she was a perfect dragoness to torment
you so!"

"But I belong to her," said the girl, innocently. "I have no other home but her house."

"Then belong to me, henceforward," he said, tenderly looking down into her blue, limpid eyes. "Surely, you cannot possibly desire to discover how deeply I love you."

Hereafter you are mine, said he.

Miriam Green, young as she was, had often dreamed of the pathway in which love should come to her, but it had never seemed like this!

"What will you do?" stammered, "what will you do?"

"What should he say?" calmly replied her lover. "Ford Court is mine.
My uncle is my beloved and honored guest. Besides, he loves me so generally that my happiness cannot be his own. And—what is this?"

They had by this time reached the solid stone wall which divided the grounds of Ford Court from the woods, and there perched up on its height—a feminine figure, clad in a blue dress, with a basket
in her hand, half full of the berries which she had gathered from the huge bushes that made a scarlet-dotted screen inside, while stretched prone on the grass
at the foot of the wall lay old Major Ford's wooden bulldog, snoring slowly
at the sight of John, but not stirred otherwise.

"Aunt Jane," said Miriam, "what are you doing on top of the wall, there?"

"I—I only wanted a few berries to put in my cucumber pickle," stammered
Aunt Jane, ready to burst into tears—
"And—what is this?"

"And I didn't suppose there was any harm in gathering them here. I've picked pecks and pecks of berries off them very bushes and nobody has said
a word."

And I was just reaching up for the finest when up comes a cross old savage and asks me what I mean by stealing fruit,
and leaves me here with this horrid, snarling brute to watch me—just as if I never, never was treated so badly in my life! And the more I try to jump off, the more the dog shows his teeth at me, and growls. He'd tear me in pieces if I stirred a foot in any direction, I do believe."

"My Uncle Ford," whispered John to Miriam. "He is a positive monomaniac on the subject of fruit thieves. The park bristles with man-traps, and there is a sentinel on every apple-tree on the premises. But it's too bad that he should have taken you aunt for one of the village pariahs! Gertrude, come here this instant, sir. I assure you, Miss Green (to Aunt Jane, who was
