SATURDAY MORNING.....March 15, 1884.

A MEAN JOKE.

About as mean a joke as was ever conceived was perpetrated by a well-known Southern journalist. The journalist and a lawyer met in a bar-room—a resort not unfamiliar—and entered into a conversation which ended in intoxication. They walked around the village until such work became tiresome to the newspaper man, whose soul yearned for something more exciting. A vicious idea occurred to him. He filled a bottle with villianous whisky, the kind known as "sixty yards and double-sighted," and invited the lawyer to accompany him to the village, where he proposed to rest in the shade. The editor began an interesting story, and would occasionally pass the bottle to his legal friend, who, interested in the story, did not observe the editor's failure to drink. It was not long until the lawyer was beastly drunk, and remarking that he needed rest bade the editor good afternoon and stretched himself on the ground and sank into a deep sleep. The editor smiled maliciously and went away. He soon returned with an ear of corn which he shelled and put into the lawyer's pockets. Then he went a short distance away where a lot of hogs were rooting and "tolled" them to the lawyer. The hungry animals, scenting the corn, pounced upon the lawyer, turned him over and over; tore his clothes—actually stripped him and rolled him into a mudhole.

"Look out, look out!" said the lawyer. "Don't crowd a fellow out of bed that way. Hold on, you're tearing the quilt. Never saw the like. Man can't go to bed without being disturbed. 'Tend to your case after awhile, gen'lemen. Know you ain't guilty, for've got the proof to sustain the facts in the case. Look out! Blame it, let me sleep awhile. Court ain't in session. Well, if you must—souy," and he struggled to his feet and staggered away.

Next day he met the editor and said: "Nice way to treat a man. Leave him down there to be eaten by hogs. I believe I'll maul you right here."

"I couldn't help it," the editor replied. "I fell asleep and when I awoke I found that the devilish hogs had carried me to the other side of town."

EGGS.

"If I owned all the hens in this country," said the marketman, as he counted out a dozen eggs and put them in a customer's basket, "and had a place to pasture them in, all I would ask would be ten years in business, and I'd make it very warm for Vanderbilt."

"How's that?" asked the reporter.

"How's that? Why, easy, that's how. Maybe you don't know, young man, that over 26,000,000 cackles, announcing the birth of the same number of eggs kept the farmer boys busy every day last year gathering in the efforts of over 26,000,000 hens. But they did. Well, those for 365 days resulted in 9,600,000,000 separate and distinct eggs, or 800,000,000 dozen, as near as I can calculate. Now, it took just 750,000,000 dozens of those eggs to supply the demand for Tom and Jerries, puddings, hard and soft boiled eggs, eggnog, and ham and eggs in this country last year, and eggs was eggs at that. I figure that thirty cents a dozen, for 1883, was about the average price. Thirty cents a dozen for 750,000,000 dozen climbs plumb up to the comfortable little purse of $225,000,000. If I had the handling of those offsprings of the nation's hens, I'd be satisfied with a profit of two cents on a dozen."

Preaching and Practice.

"See here, Mr. Blank, what are you going out to-night for?" asked Mrs. B. with a threatening look.

"Big political meeting to-night," exclaimed Mr B., apologetically.

"Political meeting, eh?" echoed Mrs. B. "You have been going to political meetings every night for five weeks, and if it had not been for me you would have worn your boots to bed every time."

"But just think how nice it would be if I should get nominated for something! Think of the loads of money I could rake in and the nice furniture and new clothes and sealskin sacques and—"

"That will do," interrupted Mrs. Blank; "I have heard that story before. You made a speech last night at a ward meeting, I see."

"Yes," responded Mr. Blank, with pardonable pride.

"And I see by the two or three lines notice of it in the newspapers that the burden of your remarks was 'the office should seek the man and not the man the office.' Now, you just take off that overcoat, sit right down, and if any office comes along and knocks I will let it in."

He sat.

CALL MR. HENRY.

As an illustration of how the simple are used by politicians, the following anecdote is interesting:

At a political meeting the other night, the speakers and audience were very much disturbed by a man who constantly called for Mr. Henry. Whenever a new speaker came on the stand, this man bawled out—

"Mr. Henry! Henry! Henry! I call for Mr. Henry!"

After several interruptions of this kind at each speech, a young man ascended the platform and was soon airing his eloquence in the most magnificent style, when the same man as before was heard bawling out at the top of his voice:

"Mr. Henry! Henry! Henry! I call for Mr. Henry to make a speech!"

The chairman arose and remarked that it would oblige the audience if the gentleman would refrain from further calling for Mr. Henry, as that gentleman was now speaking.

"Is that Mr. Henry?" said the disturber of the meeting. "That can't be Mr. Henry! Why, that's the little fellow that told me to hollow!"

ON MARYLAND SHORES.

Why Eyes Are Turning Eastward and Something of the Pleasures Promised.

From the Omaha (Neb.) Republican.

Indications point to quite an extensive emigration from the west eastward commencing with the approach of spring. The movement appears to have its impetus in the desire on the part of those with whom the rigors of a western winter deal harshly, and the coming haven of a perfect contentment would seem to be Maryland. The climate for its general evenness and just enough of the salt of the sea to avoid extremes, either in the direction of dryness or of humidity, offers very many inducements to those so constituted as to be rendered anything but happy by sudden changes. In few States is the proportion of bright sunshiny days greater than in Maryland, and the winters as a rule, while ranging as cool as eight to ten above zero, are even and equable, very rarely indeed going to one extreme or the other. It is a mistake to class Maryland as of the southern States, with the belief that being such the weather in summer must necessarily be hottest of the hot. The truth of the matter is Maryland, as a rule, is cooler on an average during the summer than the majority of Western States, the nights being particularly pleasant and refreshing. Then think of the markets of the old State. Oysters, terrapin, canvas-back ducks and other such toothsome luxuries in the winter, and in summer so endless a variety of luscious fruits, as to make one's mouth water to call them to mind. The agricultural, fruit and vegetable sections of Maryland are perfect gardens; the soil so rich, and avenues of cultivation so numerous, that he who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow, gets sustenance in full proportion to exertion. The famous Eastern Shore of Maryland is a veritable paradise for the horny-handed son of toil, as it was the fashion to call him some years since. There are markets at his very doors for almost everything taken from good old Mother Earth. Of late years the business of canning of fruits and vegetables has grown to enormous dimensions, and all through the different counties canning establishments have been erected, and contracts are made for products oft-times before even the seed has been planted. About every farmer has his own oyster-bed, as well as "ducking blind," and in the summer season supplies his table with the finest of fish in great variety, at no other cost than the mere trouble of catching them. All this may read to some people as a romance, but a visit to the Eastern Shore would quickly demonstrate the fact, and if anything falling short of rather than exceeding reality.

It is now confidently predicted by the weather prophets that June will come in like a lamb.

Which, while acting as a stimulant of the kidneys, neither excites nor irritates them, was long since supplied by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.
