John W. Fowler,

We would be pleased to have you enquire of the above owners of "DEERING Self Binders" from all parts of the county as to the merits: simplicity, durability, light draft and good work of their Harvesting machines.

REMEMBER, we use but ONE-FIFTH as many parts in our knot-tying device, and ONE-THIRD as many in our tucker as other binders to do the same work.

That the DEERING BINDER was introduced in 1879 and has been a thorough success, while many other Binders fail entirely.

That we now enter our sixth year and harvest with every assurance of a thoroughly successful and satisfactory career for the DEERING Self Binder, with all its patrons.

That the agency of the Binder remains the same year after year, making it convenient for repairs and instructions—a decided advantage over rest competitors, many of them changing agencies as often as their managers pass through the county.

That the 5 ft. Deering cuts actually 5 ft. 4 in.; the 6 foot cuts 6 ft. 5 in.; the 7 foot 7 ft. 5½ in., and the 8 foots ft. 6 in., and without driving the heaviorse into the grain;—a marked contrast with many of our competitors. One of the latter put out a machine last year with a cutter bar exactly 7 ft. long and called it an 8 foot cut!

☞ POSITIVELY no Harvester and Binder can speak so loudly in its own praise as the DEERING.

The Deering Light Mower was equally successful in is capacity. FOURTEEN sold in 1883 in Kent county.

☞ Call and see sample machines before purchasing for your harvest of 1884.

A TALK WITH BUSINESS BOYS.

A boy's first position in a commercial house is usually at the foot of the ladder, his duties are plain, his place is insignificant, and his salary is small. He is expected to familiarize himself with the business, and as he becomes more intelligent in regard to it he is advanced to a more responsible place. His first duty, then, is to work. He must cultivate day by day habits of fidelity, accuracy, neatness and dispatch, and these qualities will tell in his favor as surely as the world revolves. Though he may work uncommended for months, such conduct always meets its reward.

I once knew a boy who was a clerk in a large mercantile house, which employed an entry clerks, shipping clerks, buyers, book-keepers and salesmen, eighty young men, besides a small army of porters, packers and trucksmen; and this boy of seventeen felt that amid such a crowd he was lost to notice, and that any efforts he might make would be quite unregarded. Nevertheless, he did his duty. Every morning at 8 o'clock he was promptly in his place, and every power he possessed was brought to bear upon his work. After he had been there a year he had occasion to ask a week's leave of absence during the busy season. "That," was the response, "is an unusual request, and one which it is somewhat inconvenient for us to grant; but for the purpose of showing you that we appreciate the efforts you have made since you have been with us, we take pleasure in giving you the leave for which you ask."

"I didn't think," said the boy, when he came home that night and related his success, "that they knew a thing about me, but it seems that they have watched me ever since I have been with them."

They had, indeed, watched him, and had selected him for advancement, for shortly after he was promoted to a position of trust with appropriate increase of salary. It must be so, sooner or later, for there is always a demand for excellent work. A boy who means to build up for himself a successful business will find it a long and difficult task, even if he brings to bear efforts both of body and mind; but he who thinks to win without doing his very best will find himself a loser in the race.—Ex.

TENDENCIES OF THE TIMES.

What the Lime-Kiln Club has to Say About the Present Mode of Living.

From the Detroit Free Press.

"Gem'len," said Brother Gardner, as the triangle sounded, "ebery day o' my life I h'ar complaints about our pollytics, our religun, skules, our society, our amusements, an' our system of gov'ment. Sunthin' must be wrong wid our bull system of existence. What am it? Dat am the question I propoose to have discussed heah to-night in all its bearin's, and I ax Mr. Waydown Beebe to take de floah and lead off."

"We are runnin' away wid de kentry," said the solemn voice of Waydown Beebe, as his name was called. "We am libin' too fast. Twenty years ago I was satisfied with a two-roomed cabin an' a dollar a day. Now I has to have a two-story house and twelve shillings a day. Wives who used to go bar'fut six days a week to save deir shoes for the seventh now wear $8 butes to mop in. De pusson who airns $10 a week mus' lib jist as good as de one who airns $20. Twenty y'ars ago de woman wid a diamond ring could boss a hull nayborhood. Now when she even tries to boss de sarvant gal, de gal packs up her peck of diamonds an' quits de job, widout waitin' to collect any leetle matter like $40 back salary. When I was a boy de man who bought a can of oysters was supposed to have bin left a legacy of fo'teen millyun dollars. Nowadays de poo' man's back yard am kivered wid de empty cans.

"I kin see sign arter sign dat dis generashun am speedin' along widout thought or car' of whar' it will bring up. Men who am hoein' 'taters today em nabobs to-morrer. Men who used to believe in savin' up fur a rainy day now scatter deir cash aroun' as if de sunshine mus' allus 'last. Whar' I used to be satisfied with bean soup I now want ox-tail, an' dat's what all de hull kentry; wo has got to slow up an' simmer down, or de top rail am gwine to give way an' give us all a drap."

A Beautiful Legend.

Do you know how the site of the ancient city of the City of Jerusalem was chosen? There were two brothers who had adjoining farms. The one brother had a large family. The brother with a large family said: "There is my brother with no family; he must be lonely, and I will try to cheer him up, and I will take some of the sheaves from my field in the night-time and set them over on his farm, and say nothing about it." The other said: "My brother has a large family, and it is very difficult for him to support them, and I will help him along, and I will take some of the sheaves from my farm in the night-time and set them over on his farm, and say nothing about it." So the work of transferring went on night after night, and night after night; but every morning things seemed to be just as they were; for though sheaves had been substracted from each farm, sheaves had also been added, and the brothers were perplexed and could not understand. But one night the brothers happened to meet while making this generous transference, and the spot where they met was thought so sacred that it was chosen as the site of the City of Jerusalem. If that tradition should prove unfounded, it will nevertheless stand as a beautiful allegory, setting forth the idea that consisting of the loving act is ever a kindly and generous one performed, that is the spot fit for some temple of commemoration.

"A Blazin' Discount."

The case of Captain C. C. Duncan, shipping commissioner of New York, who sued the New York Times for $100,000 and got a verdict for twelve cents, recalls an episode in the life of a visitor to a Southern town several years ago. The village auctioneer was riding up and down the sandy street on a pretty bad case of horse flesh, for which he was vainly trying to get a bid. "Who will give five thousand dollars for this elegant saddle horse?—as kind as a spaniel and as swift as a deer. She has the strength of a war horse, is as playful as a kitten, and knows more'n most people. Who'll give five thousand? Anything less would be robbery of her owner and an insult to the noblest beast on the face of the earth. Who'll give five thousand? How much'll anybody give? Gentlemen, I leave it to your honor."

After a long and anxious pause, a voice on the sidewalk was heard to exclaim, in clear distinct and deliberate tones:

"Two dollars and a half."

"Take her," was the quick response of the auctioneer, as he nearly threw the mane of the parody on horse flesh on her haunches in the vigor with which he reined her in, lest the latter might be recalled: "take her colonel; she's your'n. But it's a blazin' discount."

A Paradise for Gunners and Anglers.

The Chesapeake and Delaware Peninsula, comprising portions of the State of Maryland, Delaware and Virginia, contains a square area of six thousand miles and measures about two hundred miles by sixty. Within this limited surface, and distant only a few hours ride from Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Washington, are to be found the finest sporting and fishing on the Atlantic coast. So abundantly has this favored region been endowed by nature with game of every description that it is worthy to be called "A Paradise for Gunners and Anglers." Such, indeed, is the title adopted for his book by a writer whose work now lies before us. His description of the Peninsula, and the advantages it affords to sportsmen, are carefully and accurately written, while the excellent engravings and maps with which his book is adorned add greatly to its appearance and value.

A TRAGIC LESSON.

From the Baltimore Sun.

The dreadful tragedy in Dorchester county, in which a son kills his father in defense of his mother, carries with it a moral that ought not to be suffered to pass unheeded. The dead man, Capt. Shenton, fell a victim to his inordinate passion for strong liquors, and the son who killed him, a youth of nineteen years, passed the ordeal of a coroner's inquest with the sympathy of all who heard the story that was told. That story traced the gradually brutalising effect of drink on a nature originally kind. Even to the last the dead man seems to have maintained a reputation for good-heartedness among his neighbors and friends. He had been at one time the captain of a vessel. He was the owner of five hundred acres of land, which he had greatly encumbered by constant dissipation, and whatever he may have been to others, he became as time wore on more and more of a drunkard and more and more of a terror to his family. He had been married for twenty years, and for seventeen of them a hard drinker. In his later years he drank from a quart to half a gallon of strong liquor daily, and frequently declared he would kill his whole family, consisting of a wife and ten children. His wife, whom he would have murdered but for the interposition of his son, said that for the last three years he had been violent, and had often struck her, and that for two years past her sufferings had been such as few women could stand and live. On the day of his death he left her on a drinking bout in company with some other men, threatening what he would do to her. On his return he proceeded to carry his threat into execution. The son, who had been chased from the house, came back at that extreme moment of terror, and to save the mother struck the blow that took the father's life. It is the old familiar story of drink and wretchedness and wreck, culminating in the shedding of the blood of the man whom drink had wrought finally up to a condition of insanity. Is it necessary for us to point the moral?

Master Pin and Lady Needle.

A Pin and a Needle, being neighbors in a work-basket, and both being idle folks, began to quarrel, as idle folks are apt to do.

"I should like to know," said the Pin, "what you are good for, and how you expect to get through the world without a head?"

"What is the use of your head," replied the Needle rather sharply, "if you have no eye?"

"What is the use of an eye," said the Pin, "if there is always something in it?"

"I am more active, and can go through more work than you can," said the Needle.

"Yes, but you will not live long, because you have always a stitch in your side," said the Pin.

"You are a poor, crooked creature!" said the Needle.

"And you are so proud that you can't bend without breaking your back."

"I'll put your head off, if you insult me again."

"I'll pull your eye out if you touch me; remember your life hangs on a single thread!" said the Pin.

While they thus talked a little girl entered, and undertaking to sew, she very soon broke off the needle at the eye. She then tied the thread around the neck of the pin, and attempting to sew with it, she pulled its head off, and threw it into the dirt by the side of the broken needle.

"Well, here we are," said the Needle.

"We have nothing to fight about now," said the Pin. "It seems misfortune has brought us to our senses."

"A pity we had not come to them sooner," said the Needle. "How much we resemble human beings who quarrel about their blessings till they lie down in the dust together, as we do!"

SHE KNEW SHE WAS RIGHT.

"Is the gentleman of the house in?" he asked.

"Yes, sir; he air."

"Can I see him a moment?"

"No, sir; you can't see a hide nor hair of 'im!"

"Why can't I, madam? I would like to speak to him on business."

"If you was a dyin' an' Jim war the only doctor in Dakoty, you couldn't sot an eye on him till he gives in an' talks decent. At dinner a while ago he told me to pass 'im the apple sass, an' I tol' him it wasn't soss, but sass, an' he said he knowed better, it was soss, an' I tol' him he'd be tuk a notion that a little apple sass'd feel soothin' to his stomach to say so, an' him I'd defend that sass with life, an' made a break for the shotgun, and he made a break up through the scuttle inter the loft. When his senses come to him an' he gives in that sass is sass he kin cum down, but if he makes a break afore that, off goes the top of his head. Thar sets the sass, stranger, an' thar's Jim up in the loft, an' that's the way the matter stands jest now, an' I reckon you'd better mosey along an' not get mixed inter this row!"

As the gentleman moved away he heard her voice saying:

"Jim we'n you git tired o' yer foolin' an' want this sass jes' squeal out!"

And a gruff voice from the darksome garret responded:

"Soss!"

LOCKED ALONE IN A ROOM FOR 60 YEARS.—Daniel Hawn, an insane man who has been kept in solitary confinement by his brothers since 1823, died in Juniata township six miles from Huntingdon, Pa., on the 9th instant. The maniac was one of [illegible] young men who, when [illegible] years [illegible] brothers, and said to have been caused by drinking [illegible] heated from a stream in the [illegible] was immediately confined by [illegible] brothers, and was ever afterwards totally secluded from the world. But once in the [illegible] quent sixty years did he regain his freedom, and that was about fifty years ago. The room in which he was kept was of small dimensions, and with but one window, and to prevent [illegible] from reaching the latter he was chained to an opposite corner. A stove was placed in small opening in a partition wall, with a grate facing into a hall, so that fires could be made without entering the room. Finally the brothers besides Daniel remained unmarried and lived together, accumulating much land and property, which they held in common. Two of them survive, and are the owners of 3,000 acres in the township.

DIED.—The Rev. R. N. Freeman, a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, recently died in the city of Mexico. His last thoughts turned to the great work to which he had consecrated his life, and almost his last words had to do with the Bible cause. He said, as reported by Rev. Joseph Norwood: "There is a tendency at home which I would gladly help to correct. Some persons, in their zeal for the missions of their own church, seem to forget the American Bible Society and its glorious work of evangelization and true charity. After all, that Society is the chief corner-stone of the great missionary movement. What could we have done in Mexico without it? I wish you to carry my love and best wishes for success to Brother Hamilton, its representative in Mexico, and through him to the Society at home."

THEY were standing at the front gate.

"Won't you come in the parlor and sit a little while, George, dear?"

"N-no, I guess not," replied George, hesitatingly.

"I wish you would," she went on. "It's awfully lonesome. Mother has gone out, and father is up stairs groaning with rheumatism in the legs."

"Both legs?" asked George.

"Yes, both legs."

"Then I'll come in a little while."

A LADY READER writes to say that she has been losing her hair recently and wants to know what she shall do to prevent it. Either keep your bureau drawer locked or else discharge the hired help and get others of a complexion differing from yours.

The millennium will never dawn until a man does as much about bringing up his own [illegible] as he does about his neighbors.
