SATURDAY MORNING.....Jan. 3, 1885.

WHAT FEDERAL OFFICERS GET.

SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES AT THE CAPITAL—LARGE WINE BILLS.

Buttermilk as a Beverage at the White House.

Correspondent New York Herald.

In the days of the so-called carpet-bag statesmen from Southern States, old employes at the Capitol say their first inquiry was, "What am I entitled to?" A member of Congress gets an allowance of $125 annually to defray his expenses for stationery. He gets mileage once only during each session going to and returning from Washington, which costs the Senate about $33,000 and the House $110,000. Each Senator and member receives $5,000 a year for his services. Baskets of flowers from the Agricultural, Botanical and Propagating gardens, gold fish from the Fish Commission ponds and unlimited freedom in the overcrowded Congressional Library, with the customary distribution of public documents to constituents—these constitute all the pay and emoluments of a national legislator. The President receives a salary of $50,000 per annum, which he usually draws quarterly. He has house rent free. The Cabinet officers each receive $8,000 for their services and find themselves. While the Executive is supposed to be well paid for his sacrifice of time and peace of mind, the expenditures of the President in maintaining the dignity of the office, in entertaining foreign Ministers, Judges, Senators, Congressmen and officials leave him but little chance to be either economical or saving. There is where Mr. Hayes had the advantage. His feasts were, with one or two exceptions, on the cold water plan, or, as they were frequently called by those obliged to attend them, "The Deluge in Miniature." Those who entertain know that the cost of wines is the largest item in the bill, and many dinners in a season to forty guests at each sitting draws very heavily even on the President's $1,000 a week salary. The Executive, too, is under the additional expense of offering his guests the best the market affords. It would be a scandal never to be forgotten for one entertained at the White House to say the wines were only so-so.

INVITATIONS WHICH ADMIT NO REFUSAL.

Now, among the first rules President Cleveland will find in force when he reaches Washington is one of ancient origin. It is this: An invitation to dine with the President takes precedence of all other invitations, and such an invitation cancels all previous engagements. There are doubtless many persons in Washington today who have been waiting years to apply that rule of rules, and may die without having tasted the good things spread at a Presidential banquet. But it is said to be of record that the rule has seldom been ignored. Mr. Boutwell did it when he was a Congressman. President Johnson asked him by the usual form of invitation to "R. S. V. P." but he never took the slightest notice of the card. So exclusive is the conduct of the President, or rather so rigidly did he formerly observe his station, that it was left to General Grant to break through the custom and dine with a friend. The first instance was in 1860, when he accepted the invitation of Mr. Henry D. Cooke, of Georgetown. Since then it has been no uncommon event to hear of the President dining here and there. President Arthur, who has observed the proprieties of the office as decorously as any citizen who ever filled it, is frequently gazetted as dining out, and one of the occasions last winter was at Mr. Blaine's residence, on Lafayette square. While the President, therefore, receives the highest salary, it is that he may disburse it mainly to the grocer and wine dealer; and as the personal friends of the President elect say he is social in his habits the avenue merchants do not anticipate a tightening of the Executive purse strings, whatever else his reform principle may inaugurate.

THE DISTRICT MARSHAL.

The old custom, too, it is said, will be inaugurated of appointing a personal friend of the President as United States Marshal of the District. This was the rule until Mr. Hayes' time. He appointed Mr. Fred Douglass Marshal, but made Colonel Thomas L. Casey, Superintendent of Public Buildings, the major domo of the mansion. President Garfield appointed his old companion in arms, Mr. Henry, the District Marshal, who might have been an ornament in society had Garfield lived, but alleged reform in civil service about the City Hall during the star route trials demanded his removal. President Arthur then appointed Mr. Clayton McMichael, of Philadelphia, the Marshal, and he discharges now the duty of first gentleman at the President's receptions. Continuing the old order of things will probably bring some New Yorker to the city to aid President Cleveland in the discharge of his social duties at the White House during the ensuing term.

SMALL POWER OF THE VICE-PRESIDENT.

The Vice-President of the United States elect made his campaign on the cry of "turn the rascals out," yet he will have less authority than anybody in official life. His principal duty will of course be to preside over the Senate, and in the event of a tie, to give the casting vote. He can appoint a secretary and messenger, and, under the rules of the Senate, he enforces the regulations made for the government of the Senate restaurant and appoints the keeper of it. He may also appoint a few of the persons employed about the Chamber, except the clerical force. That is regulated by the officers of the Senate elected by the republican Senators, who in turn parcel out the places among themselves. Mr. Hendricks in his former days in Washington lived at the Metropolitan, and as the Vice-President is not called upon to entertain or spend his salary of $8,000 per annum save as Senators do, it is probable he will take up quarters at his old hostelry, once called Brown's Hotel.

WINE AS A PERSUADER.

Speaking of wine at the President's table recalls the story told by a distinguished Indianian who visited the White House in Mr. Hayes' day and was asked in a subdued tone if he ever indulged. A suggestion of anything alcoholic about the White House startled him; but, quickly recovering his presence of mind, he replied: "I do, and generally about this time of day." Whereupon he was led by the rear stairway to the basement and regaled on—buttermilk. Those who furnish wine supplies say that the most of it is consumed at the tables of persons having business before the departments, and generally for business purposes.—When Congress is feasted it is generally for the purpose of establishing friendly relations with his vote or influence. There is in Washington today one firm keeping yachts and pleasure boats for the use of members and Senators. The days of this firm are probably numbered unless a republican majority in the Senate continue the appropriation and a democratic majority in the House continue to yield to their blandishments. The quantity of old Chambertin said to have been drank at their private dinners by the solons of the nation would dye the city red. But with all the conviviality observed here among men in legislative and official life, temperance is after all the rule. It seldom happens that any one prominent or even ordinarily known forgets the dignity of his office, so less has been heard on that score than for many years. The sale of spirits at the Capitol restaurant is restricted. The nearest place outside is the Congressional, and there the "cold tea" formerly found in the Capitol basement can be drank without suspicion or restriction.

TWO WAYS OF DRINKING.

The difference between democrats and republicans in this habit, is this: "A democrat will stand at the bar and quench his thirst, but a republican wants to sit down in a back room. The former takes whiskey straight, the latter wants mixed drinks or wine. Democrats will drink in battalions, but republicans prefer solitude or seclusion and linger over their liquor, talking about business and how to secure or defeat certain measures." The straightforward habit of the democrat and the intriguing method of the other are thus aptly illustrated in their convival moments. It was at this bar that Congressman Finnerty was once drinking a bottle of Bess' ale, and was asked how with his prejudices he could buy British ale. "It is a pleasure sometimes," said Mr. Finnerty, "to be able to swallow your enemy." There was a time when the aroma of peach brandy filled the Senate cloak room, but it is said now that the sergeant-at-arms is requested to enforce the rule prohibiting spirituous liquors to invade the precincts of the Senate. There is a tradition that it is sometimes kept in locked closets of committee rooms, but only those who know this to be true really believe the story. No one would ever suspect Senator Edmunds could play a joke on anybody but the marble statues in the niches around the Senate chamber, but he is credited with once offering Mr. Hayes a thin glass filled with gin when he asked for a glass of apollinaris water. The President was about to drink it, but recognized, he said, the juniper aroma and put it down with the remark that he would like to drink it, but gin had an awful clinging smell, yet there was no other liquor so like the color of water. "That is why I thought you would permit yourself to be deceived," was the grave and frigid Senator's reply.

What She Thinks of Drummers.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

First in the crowded car is he to offer—
This traveling man, unhonored and unsung—
The seat he paid for, to some woman young.
Or old and wrinkled. He is first to proffer
Something, a trifle from his samples may be,
To please the fancy of the crying baby.

He lifts the window and drops the curtain
For unaccustomed hands. He lends his case
To make a bolster for a child, not certain
But its mamma will frown him in the face;
So anxiously some women seek for danger
In every courteous act of every stranger.

Well versed is he in all those ways conducive
To comfort where least comfort can be found,
His little deeds of thoughfulness abound;
He turns the seat unasked, yet unobtrusive;
Is glad to please you, or have you please him,
Yet takes it very calmly if you freeze him.

He smooths the Jove-like frown of the official
By paying the fare of one who cannot pay.
True modesty he knows from artificial;
Will flirt, of course, if you're inclined that way;
And, if you are, be sure that he detects you;
And if you're not, be sure that he respects you.

The sorrows of the moving world distress him;
He never fails to lend what aid he can. [him,
A thousand hearts to-day have cause to bless
This much abused, misused, commercial man.
I do not strive to cast a halo round him,
But speak of him precisely as I've found him.

GOV. CLEVELAND STARTLED.

Captain Prim's Advice as to How to Unite England and America.

From the New York Herald.

Captain Bedford Pim, a British naval officer and an ex-member of Parliament, while passing through Albany a few days ago, on his way from the West, had an interview with President-elect Cleveland, of which Captain Prim gave the following account to a Herald reporter: The Governor received me very kindly. His manner was pleasingly cordial, yet markedly dignified. The first impression which came to me was the superiority of the original to the pictures I had seen displayed in campaign lithographs and banners. While I was talking to him strangers came into the room and stared at him, sometimes with almost rude curiosity. Yet the natural dignity of his manner was never broken, and there was none of that attempt at posing sometimes to be detected in public men.

I said to him: "Your Excellency, I am anxious to direct your attention to a railroad which it is proposed to build between Cheyenne, in Wyoming Territory, and Hudson bay, in the north Canada, which will exert beneficial results upon the general intercourse of the countries. I have here some papers on the subject which I would like you to look into at some time when the opportunity may present itself."

The Governor replied in a quiet manner: "I will read them carefully, every word."

He asked me if I were going to make any stay in Albany, and I replied no; that I was going to New York and thence to New Orleans.

"I wish," he answered, with a tired look, "that I was making that journey, too."

As I was taking my leave I remarked: "Your Excellency would doubtless be glad to take such action as would tend to further increase the feeling of amity and good will between two such great nations as America and England. Has it not occurred to your Excellency that this bond of amity and good-will might be further strengthened by a certain step on your part?"

"Pardon me—what step?" asked his Excellency, looking at me rather blankly.

"By marrying some English woman of position," I replied, with the utmost gravity. "Some English marchioness or countess, for instance, your Excellency."

His Excellency stared at me for a moment aghast, and the next moment broke into hearty laughter.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Chester, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least 5 years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he does. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully,

HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.
