SATURDAY MORNING.....JAN. 24, 1885.

A WHOLE VILLAGE MOVED.

A Spanish Town Carried Seventy-Five Feet by an Earthquake.

GRANADA, SPAIN, Jan. 10.—The New York Herald correspondent has just returned from the village of Hueneja, where the most remarkable phenomenon of the entire visitation has occurred. The whole village moved seventy-five feet from its original position, yet every house is still standing, though many roofs are cracked and many walls have bulged. The inhabitants said that the first intimation was on Christmas night, while they were holding revelry and dancing. Many were in bed. The Alcade had received information that a band of brigands was near the village. Consequently he was on the alert with the police. The inhabitants had never before experienced an earthquake, and were unaware what had occurred when chimneys tumbled, walls cracked and the rooms were filled with dust and plaster. All ran terrified from the houses and remained in the open air all night watching, praying and wondering what had happened. During the excitement the brigands succeeded in stealing mules and portable property on the outskirts of the village. Next day a small crack was observed on the hillside, but near the village. Fifteen minutes later the water supply stopped. The people noticed a crack passing through an ancient spring which for centuries has supplied the town. Subsequently the crack widened and extended entirely around the village to a crack in the valley on both sides. Day by day the crack increased, aided by repeated shocks, until some places visited today were forty feet clear, while in many places cracks covered from a hundred to three hundred feet. The town occupied a semicircular amphitheater. The entire slope moved in the direction of the valley is estimated by a provincial geologist at twenty-five metres, and this confirmed my observation. Several fields have sunk twenty feet below the upper surface. Yesterday the correspondent visited Albumelas, a village in the mountains to the northeast of Granada. Nearly the whole town is destroyed. Of a population of 2,600, 250 were killed and 300 severely wounded. The scattered population is living in brush huts on the mountain. The government gives bread, and proposes to rebuild the houses and transfer the previous householders. They deem this more economical than giving money.

SHORT LESSONS AND FEW.

In Baltimore, on Saturday last, Dr. Richard McSherry made an interesting address on the "Hygiene of Education" at the monthly meeting of the Public School Teachers' Association at the Baltimore City College. In the course of his remarks, Dr. McSherry said: "The function of education is to develop the faculties of the young, and if it impair the physical health, it does more harm than good. If properly conducted, it can improve the health. Setting aside the education children receive at home from their parents and from clergymen and starting with the regular school at seven years of age, a child will bear three hours of mental application, but not three consecutive hours. There should be one hour of study, then fifteen minutes of play, then another hour of study, and so on. At this age the needs of the stomach are greater than those of the mind. The school room should be bright and airy, with no cold draughts, and the temperature should not vary from 70 degrees Fahrenheit. The art of ventilation and warming is one of transcendent importance. The task should be adapted to the size of the pupils, the print large and the paper good. Gymnastics for the boys and calisthenics for the girls should be in every curriculum, for mental labor is much better carried on by the use of physical exercises. No tremendous efforts are necessary for complete physical health; in fact, the majority of professional athletes die in early life. Such exercise insures premature decay and early death. Physical exercise is indispensible, but not to excess. Only violent forms of exercise, however, are dangerous. According to Dr. Richardson, a man ought to grow old at sixty, but his mind ought to be in its meridian. There is too much examining. Pupils get a smattering of many things, but it is superficial. Short lessons and few are the remedy. The studies should not be above the capacity of the pupils. We don't have better men now than Washington and Franklin, who learned enough at school to be surveyor and printer. Edward Everett said a man who could write a clear, legible hand, who understands thoroughly the first four rules of arithmethic, and who has the ability to write with pure grammer, has an excellent education. Mental worry is not mental exercise. Where the lessons are very hard and laborious, the child cannot sleep well, and wakes distressed. In many lands insanity increases in direct ratio with education. Brain forcing, in fact, is highly dangerous. When it is overcrowded there will be a stunted growth and bad physical development, however well fed and clothed the child may be. Long sessions exhaust the attention, which is the sine qua non. Coeducation is a mistake. The Western schools, where it has been adopted, are intelectually a success and physically a failure. There are many unhappy women in our cities of culture who are so on account of too much culture."

"THE most agreeable companion," says Lessing, "is a simple, frank man without any high pretensions to an oppressive greatness, one who loves life and understands the use of it, obliging alike at all hours; above all, of a golden temper, and steadfast as an anchor. For such an one we gladly exchange the greatest genius, the most brilliant wit."

A GENTLEMAN was one day relating to a Quaker a tale of deep distress, and concluded by saying: "I could not but feel for him." "Verily, friend," replied the Quaker, "thou didst right in that thou didst feel for thy neighbor; but didst thou feel in the right place—didst thou feel in thy pocket?"

BEFORE offering to ring the street-car bell for a lady about getting off, look closely at her right hand. If she wears a diamond ring and you pull the strap she will be your enemy for life.

AN old maid in Nashville keeps a parrot which swears, and a monkey which chews tobacco. She says that between the two she doesn't miss a husband very much.

A SCIENTIFIC JOURNAL says that the ear of a clam is at the base of the foot. It must be funny to see a clam walk around on its ear listening for earthquakes.

PURSUED BY CANNIBALS.

The London Standard prints a remarkable story of adventure. It is a letter containing a plant-hunter's account of his stewardship in New Guinea. He was one of a party of six sent out by the proprietors of a Melbourne newspaper to explore the interior of the great island. "In our little schooner," he says, "we went up a very large river, one or two miles wide; the captain would not let us land, as he wished to explore the river first. This main river turned out to be an estuary, though not known before. From it we went up a new river, which was called the Syme, for many miles, passing several mouths of other rivers, all new to white men, and which were duly named. We were anxiously looking out for natives and their villages, but saw none. All the way up for miles this Syme was affected by the tides, but when receding we had to use all our strength to fight against the powerful current to get upward. The naturalist and I were often anxious to get on shore; but no, our captain wanted to get to the top of the river, or as far as we could, and then return and begin land exploration. We went up many miles, until the current was so strong that we could get no further. We could see the banks of the river were clothed with lofty trees, palms, and in many instances ferns of large dimensions. There was one tree (I could not tell what it was) one evening most brilliantly lit up with fireflies—a most wonderful sight.

"On our return," the collector continues, "down the river toward the mouth of the sea, where we intended to begin exploring inland, we saw a sight that made us shudder—a large number of canoes crammed full of natives, cannibals. These wretches live further round the coast, and make periodical trips down the coast to the more harmless natives, and clear them out, killing all before them. They are called the Dugarra men. They have decimated the coast tribes almost to a man. In some instances they take them back and kill and eat them. Here was a dilemma and the force of the current was fast taking us into their midst. We, however, managed to get our little schooner to windward and set sail, and at the same time assisting her with all our power with the dingy we had. Night was coming on, so that we managed to escape through the darkness. The thing was what to do. Our captain was sick; he had been unwell for some days. At last, as a ruse, we set all sail on the schooner for up the river and abandoned her, getting into the dingy and rowing to the side of the river. Having done this, we sank the dingy in the mangroves which grew fearfully thick. We hoped they would follow our schooner and we should escape. We had to leave all behind except a few odds and ends we could hurridly get—a little medicine, our guns, and some oatmeal and a few biscuits. We thus started off for the coast, to find it through swamps and mangroves, every moment expecting the cannibal wretches at our feet. On we went, and at last, weary, made a bed on the ground where best we might. In the morning we found ourselves on the edge of a large flat, of cold gray soil, covered with pitcher plants; but on we went. Then we came to a large creek or river; had to get through best we could—the blazing tropical sun overhead, the miasmatic steam from the swamps enveloping us. Some of us began to feel a touch of the fever; one got light-headed for a while. We continued for three or four days at this game, and nothing to eat but dry oatmeal. One morning we were crossing a native hunting ground, and presently, without warning, a spear came whizzing through the air and struck one of our men in the foot, going clear through boot and foot. We thought our end had come, and determined to die desperately; but the natives decamped as we made up our minds to fight it out, for we could not find one. On we went and reached the coast at last."

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 31, 1882. Yours gratefully,

HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities and Corruption, stimulates the action of the vitals, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.
