SATURDAY MORNING..... Feb. 14, 1885.

A YANKEE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The State Agricultural Society of Connecticut held its annual meeting at Hartford on the 30th ult. A correspondent of the N. Y. Sun says "a hundred hard-headed and hard-fisted men" were present, with Hon. James A. Bill the president, in the chair. The correspondent then continues:

"Mr. Bill makes money out of the soil in Connecticut by shrewd management. Beginning in the early fall, he starts his menagerie of all kinds of stock of the finest varieties, and makes the tour of the county and State fairs, raking in scores of cash prizes and selling his stock at fancy prices as he goes. The slower farmers have been admiring his stock and letting him do this sort of thing for the last twenty years, and they will probably continue to let him do it for twenty years longer. It occasions no surprise therefore, that Mr. Bill has been President of the society, as a member put it, "ever sense his twelve-year-old line-back Durham bull Nero was a yerlin'."

"The members had tabled the knotty question as to what causes some cows to have five teats when the great problem of the day, concerning the changing of the State fair from Meriden to Charter Oak Park, Hartford, was taken up. Then the fur began to fly. Sober, gray-bearded, and bald-headed men, who never swear or get excited, except when breaking steers or building stone walls, completely lost their heads, and a spirited debate, by no means confined to the subject, but "runnin' all over a ten-acre lot," as one expressed it, ensued.

"Mr. Porter Clough, of Meriden, was one of Hartford's bitterest opponents. He said: "What is Hartford, anyhow? Nothing but a graveyard. She died long ago, and her people now are walking about in their shrouds to save their funeral expenses. What did Hartford do with the fair before? She was so dead that she let it die out itself, and the members had to go down in their pockets to get themselves home from the city. It was so in Norwich—it was so in Danbury. Meriden has made a success of the thing. Now let Meriden reap what benefit there is in it.

"Mr. Henry Farnam, of Hartford, a bony-looking man, arose with glaring eye at this, and fairly howled:

"Mr. Chairman, I deny the foul slander of the gentleman from Meriden. Why did the fair prove a success at Meriden and a failure in Hartford? Because they allowed horse trotting at the former place."

"Horse trotting is the society's vulnerable point. Under its strictly moral charter it cannot allow trotting at its fairs." The older members winced.

"Now, gentlemen," Mr. Farnam went on, "I know something about cattle and something about three-minute horse-flesh, and I can tell you that if you want to make money at your fairs and draw the crowd you have got to have something raything livelier than a fifteen-minute race to an ox-cart. We are living in an age of progress, Mr. Chairman—aye progress—and you cannot keep her still! (Applause from the younger members; black and angry glances from the older ones.) Now, I happen to know that when the fairs were held here one of the good old deacons, at the head of the society, positively refused to have a horse moved out of a walk inside the grounds. An' yet he's now carping over Hartford's being dead. As soon as he gets to Meriden he advertises for fast horses, an' I will bet you a hundred'n a quarter that every dollar of profit that's come out of the fair since has been made off'n the horse trots. And if we are going to have horse trots let's have 'em on the best course in the United States, the Charter Oak."

There was much subdued talk at this and the young men looked triumphantly at Deacon Hiram Pichett of Farmington, while the old men looked imploringly. Deacon Hiram is a church member. He was in a tight box, and he knew it. He took off his red yarn comforter, laid his fur cap on the table, rubbed the few white hairs on his head, in deep contemplation, cleared the fog from his throat, and said rather confusedly:

"Gentlemen, it is true we had horse races at Meriden. It is true they make more money than corn or potatoes, or squashes or pumpkins. But I don't approve of horse racing, though. Be it far from me. An' the 'ciety don't nuther. But we had to do it. There was no help for it. When we moved to Meriden, it was voted to put the President and clerks on salaries, and the directors were put under bonds to pay their salaries. Consekently we had either got to make the fair pay 'em, or pay 'em ourselves. We chose the former, an' with the success you have heard. And I will say, right here, gentleman, before I set down, that hoss racing will pay if you'll keep in mind one thing—there ain't no money in slow hosses."

WHAT CAN THEY DO.

Between forty and fifty years ago there existed among American boys a much greater capacity for "turning their hands" to any practical matter than is found among them today. The boy at that period did "chores" about the house. He was familiar about the stable. Even in town or village he could milk the cows, harness the horse or mend a broken picket. He learned early the use of the tools in the barn and probably spoiled more or less good lumber. A little older he learned a trade or went to sea. There was not so much "style" as now, but more practicability. More boys could handle the axe, chop wood and use the buckesw. A great many American boys now can do none of these things. Everything is done for them. They are above grooming horses, milking cows, or mending pickets. A trade is despised. They grow white-handed, well dressed, conversant with the polish and veneer of society, but often useless in practical matters. Many of them cannot drive a nail nor tie a square knot. If the harness break on an out of the way place of the road, they are helpless. They cannot even make a fire. They cannot use an axe or hatchet. They cannot chop down a tree or point a stake. For the most trifling bit of carpentry they must send for a mechanic. They are incapable of cooking the simplest meal. They cannot plant a potato or corn patch. They are useful where? At a desk in a banking house or a lawyer's office. They are entirely "professional." They are always dressed up to the prevailing style, and own no overalls or working clothes.

EDUCATE all the faculties and propensities of children; but above all, see that the conscience, the balance-wheel of the moral system, is trained unto perfect accord with the principles of positive truth and absolute justice.

TO FORECAST THE WEATHER.

An exchange says every man who will take trouble to observe the following atmospheric points will be able to forecast the weather for his section. He will find it to be of much advantage and profit to him for the time given to the observation. The general rules are as follows:

1. When the temperature falls suddenly there is a storm forming south of you.
2. When the temperature rises suddenly there is a storm forming north of you.
3. The wind always blows from a region of fair weather to a region where a storm is forming.
4. Cirrus clouds always move from a region where a storm is in progress to a region of fair weather.
5. Cumulus clouds always move from a region of fair weather to a region where a storm is forming.
6. When cirrus clouds are moving rapidly from the north or northeast there will be rain inside of twenty-four hours, no matter how cold it is.
7. When the cirrus clouds are moving rapidly from the south or southwest there will be a cold rain storm on the morrow if in summer, and if it be in winter there will be a snow storm.
8. The wind always blows in a circle around a storm, and when it blows from the north the heaviest rain is cast of you; if it blows from the south the heaviest rain is west of you; if it blows from the west the heaviest rain is north.
9. The wind blows unless rain or snow is falling within 1,000 miles of you.
10. Whenever heavy white frosts occur a storm is forming within 1,000 miles north or northwest of you.

RAPID GROWTH OF A CENT.

A cent seems of little value, remarks an exchange, but if it is only doubled a few times it grows to a marvelous sum. A young lady in Portland caught her father in a very rash promise, by a knowledge of this fact on her part.

She modestly proposed that if her father would give her only one cent on one day, and double the amount on each successive day for just one month, she would pledge herself never to ask of him another cent of money as long as she lived. Paterfamilias, not stopping to run over the figures in his head, and not supposing it would amount to a large sum, was glad to accept the offer at once, thinking it also a favorable opportunity to include a possible marriage dowry in the future. On the twenty-fifth day he became greatly alarmed, lest if he complied with his own acceptance he might be obliged to be "declared a bankrupt on his own petition."

But on the thirtieth day the young girl demanded only the pretty little sum of $3,368,709.13! The astonished merchant was only too happy to cancel the claim by advancing a handsome cash payment for his folly in allowing himself to give a bond—for his word he considered as good as his bond—without noticing the consideration therein expressed, and by promising to return to the old custom of advancing smaller sums daily until otherwise ordered.

Our arithmetical reporter has been "figuring on it," and says that if the old gentleman had fulfilled his promise, the daughter would have had, upon the receipt of the thirtieth payment, the snug little sum of $10,430,617.43.

MARTIAL GLORY.

The other side of the picture is so seldom brought before the public eye that it may not be amiss to learn what a reliable historian relates concerning the army of the renowned "Frederick the Great."

Thackeray says: "The life the private soldier led was a frightful one to any but men of iron courage and endurance. There was a corporal to every three men, marching behind them and pitilessly using the cane. Many men would give way to the most frightful acts of despair under these incessant persecutions and tortures; and among several regiments a horrible practice had sprung up, which for some time caused the greatest alarm to the government. This was a strange, frightful custom of child murder. The men used to say that life was unbearable—that suicide was a crime; in order to avert which, and to finish with the intolerable misery of their position, the best plan was to kill a young child which was sure of heaven, and then to deliver themselves up as guilty of the murder."

One of Frederick's young officers says: "We were afraid of the King [Frederick the Great] somehow, and were cowed before him like wild beasts before their keeper. I have seen brave men of the army cry like children at the cut of the cane. In a day of action the man would dare anything, but when they had made the brutes fight they lashed them again into subordination. Almost all of us yielded to the spell—scarce one could break it."

The French officer I have spoken of was in my company, and caned like a dog. I met him at Versailles twenty years afterward, and he turned quite pale and sick when I spoke to him of old days. "For God's sake," said he, "don't talk of that time; I wake up from my sleep trembling and crying even now."

PRESIDENTIAL HANDWRITING.

Abraham Lincoln wrote a small, careful hand.

The handwriting of General Grant is easy to read.

Andrew Johnson's handwriting was large and labored. His fingers seemed all thumbs.

Zachary Taylor wrote with a blunt pen, with few flourishes and no attempt at ornamentation.

John Tyler, next to Garfield, was the best writer among the Presidents. He wrote a clear, legible, open hand.

Martin Van Buren did not like to write, but when he did sign his name it was in large, round characters.

Franklin Pierce was the worst writer of all the Presidents. His writing was not pretty, but it could be easily read.

The handwriting of William Henry Harrison was elastic. He was a man of varied accomplishments and wide information.

No one would ever be able to counterfeit the handwriting of Rutherford B. Hayes. He never made the same letter the same way.

James Buchanan was proud of his handwriting. He prided himself on his punctuation, spelling and the elegance of his style of composition.

James K. Polk made a signature which looks like copper plate. Every line of it is well made, and there is a flourish under it which would do honor to a writing teacher.

POVERTY has its cares, my son, but then wealth has its cares, too, more than poverty, 10 to 1. Look at the panics on the money market every week! Do you ever hear of a financial panic in an almshouse?—Brooklyn Eagle.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 20, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least 15 years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 31, 1882. Yours gratefully, HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.
