SIGHT SEEING "UP NORTH."

TWO CHESTERTOWNS INCLUDE IN A RECREATION TOUR—JOTTING OF THE JOURNEY.

In Philadelphia—The Delaware Water Gap—An Eccentric Charge—The Kitteny Mountain—Charting a Steamer—The Man who Rents a Hole in the Mountain—Scranton Coal Region—Hingham and Kitter- He Voted for Blaine "of Course."

We have often read of and heard portrayed the wonders of Niagara, the grandeur of the Lakes, the curious fens of Watkins, and the famous Delaware Water Gap; we have seen their beauties in nature, and so vivid have been the pictures drawn by tip and pen that many a time we have in imagination stood by the roaring cataract and scaled the gorges of the gap and the gap. The desire to visit these places has grown with our years but the privilege has not been granted us until now. Vacation holidays and recreation outings being in order we determined to combine "sight seeing" with recreation and take in some of the "wonders of creation" northward. A party of five had called the trip but when the time came to make it two of them were unable to go. The party of three, consisting of the writer, his wife and daughter, set out on the morning of the 19th of August.

On the morning of August 19th, Mr. J. K. Aldridge and the writer started on the trip. We were accompanied by Mr. J. K. Aldridge, a young Kentonian, and several other young Kentonians to Philadelphia. Reaching that city we spent an hour in crossing the "red tape" of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in order to arrange excursion tickets for the route that pleased us. We found the officials clever and accommodating and for $17.15 each secured the long train of coupons for the round trip. After a short call at the comfortable head-quarters of Leung, E. L. Catlin, of the city police, we took the train northward via the Belvidere Division.

To Delaware Water Gap. One hundred miles brought us to the Delaware Water Gap. On the way we ran for a long distance on the side of the mountain, and between that and the Delaware and Lehigh canals. The river is very shallow and narrow, and the water is very cold. We found the officials clever and accommodating and for $17.15 each secured the long train of coupons for the round trip.

The Greenwood Hotel, furnished as comfortable quarters and enjoyed the rest after our long journey. The writer found it necessary to call on a doctor. Next morning that professional called and found us in excellent health. "What do you do for me?" we inquired of the doctor. "I am a doctor," he replied. "What is your business?" "I am a doctor," he replied. "What is your business?" "I am a doctor," he replied.

"Five dollars and a half." "But for the life of us we couldn't imagine why he had that half dollar added to the five, and though my money was not so good as his, I was not so poor as he was. But both of us joined in the prayer for deliverance during the balance of the day. The view from the mountain was very fine. The Delaware Water Gap takes its name from the fact that the Kittatinny or Blue Ridge range of the Allegheny mountains crosses it at this point at a little distance the space for the course of the river is hardly perceptible. The rugged, jagged, and rocky mountain rises above the level of the sea; the water is deep and clear; on the Pennsylvania side a number of hotels, while upon the crest of the mountain are two large and comfortable hotels. The view from the balconies overlooking the river was very fine. Moored to the shore, a large and comfortable hotel, the "Kittatinny" and "Gap House." We ascended the steep grades and inspected the beautiful grounds and shrubbery of each hotel. The view from the balconies overlooking the river was very fine.
