engaged in the lower Counties of the State, devoting every energy of mind and body to rousing up attention, from its present deathlike indifference. Without such agency the work can never be done, and it becomes a matter of grave consideration whether the Board of Managers ought to look so much at securing funds by voluntary Contribution when there is no existing feeling in the public mind to warrant the hope of success, as to the production of a deep, and pervading interest in all classes of the Community. Could the Board adopt such measures as to secure a part of Mr Kennard's salary, this object might be accomplished.

I am more than ever convinced that a flying trip made to any part of the State with an occasional address can do but little in the production of the adequate interest. Fidelity in every part of the work and thoroughness in each field of labour is in my judgment the only efficient mode of operating.

With very great respect
