SATURDAY MORNING ....JAN. 9, 1886.

Brevities from Fairlee.

A happy New Year, Messrs. Editors, if not too late. In this locality we have had, if not a very merry, a very quiet Christmas, with delightful weather. A neighbor gave me a glimpse of the goose-bone, mistaking me for the meteorologist of Buck Neck. The indications point to a severe close of winter, if I rightly understand them. What does brother Shuster say?

The young folks must have their fun I suppose, but it ought not and need not be mischievous. Fire-crackers are dangerous and should be tabooed. Twice during the week Captain Rogers was compelled to extinguish a fire enkindled on his premises by the thoughtless use of these explosives; and Mr. Geo. E. Casey while riding through Rock Hall, and again through Edesville, with his wife and two young children, had his horse so much frightened as to become unmanageable.

Salem Sabbath School gave an interesting entertainment on Monday evening, 28th. Two tall evergreens loaded with nuts and confectionery, &c., two tables, one of oranges and one of apples, were stripped of their contents, and distributed, first to the children and then to their seniors.

Brother James Kendall continues to improve, his condition varying with the weather.

George R. Schwearer made a brief visit to his Fairlee friends in Christmas week. He is attending the "Capital University" at Columbus, Ohio, He expects to graduate in June, and his friends predict and wish for him a brilliant future. Elmore Skirven, son of James A., is at home for a vacation. He has permanent employment on the Elevators in Baltimore.

The Grange entertainment, though delayed, by circumstances, is in process of active preparation.

SIMON SHARP.

Letter from Still Pond Creek.

Messrs. Editors:—I notice you have correspondents in various parts of the county, who tell of the wonders and glories of their respective towns and villages, but I never see anything from the Creek. Now I think we are of sufficient importance to make an appearance once in awhile in the newspaper. Many matters and things might be mentioned but we started out with a determination to be brief.

A short time ago an aged man related to me his own history, which I give as far as I can recollect, in his own words: "I did not believe in the Bible or in the reality of religion at all, I considered what was called Christian experience a delusion, the effect of excitement upon the imagination, and Christians as a set of fanatics. I had studied skeptical writers and was confirmed in my belief that death is an eternal sleep, no heaven, no hell. And yet at times, as the years sped on, an occasional doubt would arise. The question would force itself upon me, what if these things prove true? After suffering long from these annoying doubts and suggestions, I at last resolved to try a method which would enable me to become entirely free from them. I said to myself, 'I will secretly try the very method these Christians propose. They recommend prayer and Bible reading, I will test it. If I do not find it true my mind shall never again be disturbed by a doubt.' Accordingly I secured a day of solitude, a Sabbath when all the members of the family were absent at church. I knelt and prayed, 'O, Lord, if thou dost exist, hear me; if there is a heaven to gain and a hell to shun, show it me; I have never believed it, and if all these things are true and the Bible is true, reveal it to me and enlighten me.' Then I searched the Bible, commencing with the New Testament I read continuous chapter after chapter, with interest and absorbed attention, ever and anon asking God to show me the truth. The more I read the stronger my interest grew, and deeper the conviction—the astounding conviction on me that all this was true! I have lived all my life believing lies; I am a sinner; I examined the Bible throughout; I dwelt on the creation, the fall, the coming of Christ. Deeper and deeper grew the conviction of my guilt; my anxiety became intense, and I did not conceal it. Throughout every day of the week I spent my time searching the word of God and in prayer, sometimes spending the whole day alone in a wood, beseeching God to have mercy on my soul. At last, on Sabbath morning, just a week from the day I set apart to see it these things were true, while I was riding to church, Christ revealed himself to me as a Saviour—my justification. The way of salvation seems clear and plain, and I inwardly exclaimed, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth!' My soul was filled with unspeakable joy. My tongue broke forth in unknown strains and sang, 'Redeeming Grace.' I had in truth found out by my own experience the truth and reality of religion, and soon commenced to tell others what a wondrous Saviour I had found." The transforming power of the religion of Jesus was so marked in the life and character of this individual that no one who knew him could doubt its genuineness. For thirty years he has been a pillar in the church of which he is a member, and has faithfully testified, and to the end of his three score years and ten continued to testify to the realities of the religion which he has thus tested. Skeptics, unbelievers, try this method yourselves, honestly, faithfully, and become satisfied whether or not there is reality in the Christian religion.

I will close by wishing you and many others A Happy New Year.

D. D.

Horrid Predicament of a Dude.

Alfonso was a dainty Louisville dude, a member of that class we should from daily wear exclude and put it under glass. He could not take a healthy breath, for like excess of steam, so tight was he squeezed beneath, 'twould open every seam. He had his cane tied to his hand with a dainty silken string; if it should drop and he should bend 'twould ruin everything. He reached a massive garden wall, a foliage hidden retreat; was just about to give a call when, falling to his feet, a silver dollar—all he had—went ringing to the street. I will not say the dude was mad; the word is incomplete. Here was a pretty how to do; the dude was desperate. He dare not bend, for he well knew what then would be his fate. He was no Vanderbilt, to lose a dollar in that way. There wasn't much time for him to choose, and time for no delay. There was no Arab there to scoff at his sad misery, so he must take his trousers off or let the dollar be. Now all was dark; no one was near. Ah, shield him, shades of night! He did the deed in trembling and fear, and got his tin all right. Bow wow! What's that? Alfonso knew; he'd heard that sound before. Just as he was, like wind he flew; but through an open door Towser leaped. He made a break and caught the trousers fast. Alfonso didn't stop to shake his grip but hurried past. The gardener came running then—"Hi, Towser, bring it here! Ha, ha! That dude's been here again; but this is mighty queer. He must have jumped clear from his clothes. I'll use these trousers now, I guess, for sleeves to fix my coat."

Both Dead.

"Good morning, sir."
"Morning."
"I—er—beg your pardon."
"I beg yours, sir."
"May I ask you what you gave your horse for the botts?"
"Turpentine, sir."
"Oh, thanks—er—er—Good morning."
"Good morning."

* * * * * * *

"Good morning, sir."
"Good morning."
"Beg pardon, but did I understand you to say that you gave your horse turpentine for the botts?"
"Yes, sir."
"Well, I tried it and it killed my horse."
"It killed mine, sir."
"Oh—er—er—Good morning."
"Good morning."

QUEER.

The following illustrates a few of the peculiarities of that most difficult of all modern tongues, the English, if a literal meaning is given to speech.

"Why," said Tompkins, "I wouldn't live in that section for any amount of money."
"Why not?"
"Queerest people there you ever saw."
"I never knew that before."
"Well, they are; I took a trip through there once, and that was enough for me."
"Well, how are they queer?"
"Well, I'll tell you. They take you at your word there. I was out one day riding horseback, and I came to a place where roads branched. I didn't know which one was right, so I inquired at a house.
"'I want to go to ——' said I.
"'Well,' said the man who came to the door, 'I reckon you can.'
"'How can I get there?'
"'Wall, yer might ride, and yer might walk.'
"'Yes, but which one of the roads shall I take?'
"'Look here stranger, yer better not take either of 'em. That wud be wus than horse-stealin'.'
"'Well, I mean which one will take me there?'
"'Neither one; yer let 'em alone, and they're peaceable enough.'
"I was getting angry, but I held in and said.
"'You misunderstand me. What I want to know is, which of those two roads goes to ——.'
"'Neither one nor tother, stranger; they both stay what they be.'
"'How far is ——?'
"'That depends altogether on which road yer go by. If yer go by the left one, it's six miles; if yer go by the right, yer won't never get there.'
"Now if you don't call that queer, I'm mistaken. They are all ears for words, not sense. I tell you it is a queer place. I wouldn't live there."

A Cure for Diphtheria.

A sure cure for this terrible disease, it is said, is found in a gargle, made of a teaspoonful of flour of sulphur in a wineglassful of water—instead of spitting out the gargle, swallow it. In cases where gargling is rendered impossible by the closing of the throat, the fumes of the sulphur inhaled are equally effective. Merely place a live coal on a shovel and sprinkle the sulphur on it. Allow the patient to inhale by putting his head over the shovel. In some cases it is blown into the throat by means of a quill all these modes are claimed to be equally sure in bringing about instant relief.
