Kent News.

SATURDAY MORNING..........JAN. 23, 1886.

Santa Claus Skipped Him.

A farmer and his wife hitched their team in front of a Grand River avenue grocery just before Christmas and then went in to make some purchases. By and by they were seen whispering together in a very confidential manner, and as the woman gave him a handful of pennies, tied up in a rag, she was heard to say:

"Now, don't you forget! There's eighty cents, and that will get a twenty-cent present for each one of them."

He left the store with a fatherly smile on his face and started down town. Three long hours passed before his return and then a policeman had him by the arm.

"Does anyone know this man?" he asked as he led him into the store.

"Yes. He's my husband," answered the woman.

"Chourse I'm yuze husband—chourse I am," mumbled the man who was "step-high" drunk.

"Well, you take care of him," said the officer to the woman as he surrendered his charge.

"Did you get the presents for the children?" asked the wife as she took a package from his pocket.

"Shertingly I did. Bless 'er little hearts—bless 'em?"

She opened the package, and there was twenty-four of the blackest, meanest looking cigars ever put on sale.

"Why, Samuel, what does this mean?" she exclaimed.

"Whaz 'er mean? Whaz 'er mean? Why, zhem ish Chris'en presents for um blessed children!"

"They are! Why, you miserable old idiot, what do these chillun want of cigars?" screeched the wife.

"Whaz 'er want of 'em! Whaz 'er want of em? Why, 'er want 'em to put in papa's Christmas stocking, of course?"

They loaded him into the wagon, and the woman took the lines and started for home, and as she turned the team around she said to the grocer:

"It's six miles home, and there are four cigars to the mile. I'll make him eat ever one of them."—Detroit Free Press.

How Women Buy.

"Women reason very strangely," said a North Side grocer to me the other day. "You see them on State street, eager and wild-eyed, spending thousands of dollars on dress, dress, dress. When they come to buy the staples of life they are entirely changed. They never haggle over the price of dress goods, but they grumble over the price of codfish and will argue for an hour over a cent in a bargain. They try to make up in that way the money squandered on dress. You'd be astonished if I told you how poorly the families of our best dressed ladies live. Every one seems to think that it is their bounden duty to beat the grocer down. They also think they should be able to buy retail groceries at wholesale price. The lady who presides over one family on the North Side, a family worth millions of dollars and who has given away half a million to religious institutions, is a specimen of the class. Our bills are the last she thinks of paying and then she continually kicks at everything. Why, what do you think she did? She obtained in some manner the case price of all canned goods. She imagined she had been cheated by us and sent her pass-book with the case price opposite each purchase of canned goods she had made in the last six months and a lengthy mathematical problem showing the difference she supposed in her favor. She asked that we rebate it (the sum, I think, was about $2). She wanted case prices on goods bought two or three cans at a time."—Chicago News.

They Had Met at Last.

"There," she said, as she raised a window in a Pullman car the other day; "now I can breathe. The air in this car is stifling. Why don't they have better ventilation? If I couldn't sit next to an open window I believe I should die."

Presently a slender female sitting directly opposite leaned over and asked her if she wouldn't just as lieve close that window now, as the draft was more than she could stand.

"No, madam, I shall not close this window. I could not live with it down. I was just thinking how delightful it was with it open; now you want it shut, but I shall not shut it; so there."

"Then you are a selfish thing, and I shall have to change my seat."

Just then a gentleman sitting close by reached over and said:

"Ladies, this window being raised makes no difference, as this car has double windows and not a breath of air can possibly get through the one that is still down."

Then the one that had raised the window turned to the other and, with a crushed look on her face, said:

"Madam, I beg your pardon, but I think two fools have met at last."

A Remarkable Resuscitation.

John F. Munger, a well-known citizen of Platteville, Wis., has suffered greatly from rheumatism in the feet. Some days ago, with the hope of relieving the pain, he bathed his feet freely with tincture of aconite, and then thrust them into a pail of hot water. A tingling sensation followed, the pulse weakened, the skin became moist and clammy, and violent vomiting and retching ensued. Dr. Gasser was called, but on his arrival found Mr. Munger apparently dead. The heart seemed to have stopped beating, and the doctor, with other medical men who were summoned, decided that Munger had died from aconite poisoning, having absorbed the drug through his feet. An undertaker set about preparing the body for burial, when Dr. Gasser, as an experiment, injected with a hypodermic syringe a mixture of brandy and digitalis near the heart. In a few minutes the supposed dead man began to gasp, and there was a faint sound of beating over the heart. More hypodermics were given, the death pallor was succeeded by a reddish glow, the muscles relaxed, perspiration broke out, and Mr. Munger slowly returned to life. He is now entirely out of danger. The physicians consider his resuscitation a most remarkable one.

An Editor's Tribulations.

We borrowed a mule and buggy last week and started out to stir up our delinquents. We rode twenty-five miles the first day, had our new hat smashed by coming in contact with an overhanging limb, wore out a buggy whip that cost 60 cents, and collected $1.50 in cash and a bushel and a-half of corn. The second day we rode twenty-two miles, missed our dinner, dunned seventeen of our beloved patrons, and didn't collect a cent. The third day we arose at 4 o'clock A. M., missed our breakfast, lost twenty minutes trying to wake up Jim Alexander as we passed his house, rode twenty-four miles and collected $4.50. The fourth day we traversed the whole country, lost a goose one of our friends had given us for a Christmas dinner, and collected $3.50. We then came home, turned the mule out to die, and went to bed. If anybody wants to buy a good printing office, with ample assets and small liabilities, and large latitude for fame, &c., we are prepared to offer a bargain. We have been tendered the position of night clerk in a brick hotel in Arkansas, and would be glad to accept it if we can work off our present enterprise on some unsuspecting citizen. In writing for information don't forget to enclose a stamp—that is, if a reply is expected.—McDonough (Ga.) Weekly.

Farmer Schwab's Credulity.

Christian Schwab is a rich Dutch farmer who lives in Saville township, Pa. He believes in fortune tellers and charms. A few days ago a party of gypsies came through the township. Schwab had his fortune told by one of them. He was told that if he would place $25 at the foot of a white ash tree that forked east and west within nine paces of a running stream, and leave the money there over night, he would find it doubled the next day. There was just such a tree on Schwab's farm. He placed $25 at the foot of the tree, and next morning found $50 there. He visited the gypsy again, and wanted to know if the money transaction could be repeated. The gypsy read the cards and informed Schwab that it could be repeated, and that he had better place all the money he could raise at the foot of the tree and make all he could, for it would be doubled. Schwab placed $700 as directed. The next day he went to gather the money. The $700 were gone. Schwab hurried to consult the gypsy. She was gone too, and the gullible farmer is still looking for her.

"Pa," said a Philadelphia lad, "what is a martyr?" "Oh, son, don't bother me." "Ma, what's a martyr?" "Why, my child, I am a martyr." "You a martyr," exclaimed the husband; "how so?" "Why, this is the third winter I have worn this bonnet, and I'm married to a man too mean too buy me another one."

"Are you asleep, Bobby?" "Why, ma?" "Because it's time to take your medicine." "Then I'm asleep."

Lights Along the Shore.

Confidence is a plant of slow growth in an aged bosom.—[William Pitt.

Avoid shame, but do not seek glory—nothing so expensive as glory.—[Sidney Smith.

There is something exceedingly thrilling in the voices of children singing.—[Longfellow.

The yoke a man creates for himself by wrong-doing will breed hate in the kindest nature.—George Eliot.

We are apt to be deluded into false security by political catchwords, designed to flatter rather than instruct.—[Garfield.

There are three things in speech that ought to be considered before they are spoken—the manner, the place, and the time.—[Southey.

There is not in nature anything so remotely distant from God, or so extremely opposite to him, as a greedy and griping niggard.—[Barrow.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men but be brought to delight in them.—[Locke.

Inquisitive people are the funnels of conversation; they do not take in anything for their own use, but merely to pass it to another.—[Sir Richard Steele.

Let every man take care how he speaks and writes of honest people, and not set down at a venture the first thing that comes uppermost.—[Cervantes.

God is present in the conscience of good and bad. He is there a remembrancer to call our actions to mind, and a witness to bring to judgment.—[Jeremy Taylor

Submission is the only reasoning between a creature and its Maker, and contentment in his will is the best remedy we can apply to misfortune.—[Sir W. Temple.

I thank God that if I am gifted with little of the spirit which is able to raise mortals to the skies, I have yet none, as I trust, of that other spirit, which would drag angels down.—[Webster.

To believe your own thought, to believe what is true for you in your private heart is true for all men—that is genius. Speak your latent conviction and it shall be the universal sense: for the inmost in due time becomes the outmost, and our first thought is rendered back to us by trumpets of the Last Judgment.—[Emerson.

The Churches in Darkness.

Owing to some unknown (or known) cause at the gas works the lights in the Elkton Presbyterian Church last Sunday night in the midst of the service gradually grew dim and so nearly flickered out that the little gas that remained in one lot of them was turned off, leaving the house in nearly total darkness. The subject of the sermon was "Death," and as the lights grew dimmer and dimmer and finally left the audience in nearly total darkness, it produced a scene of rare dramatic effect seldom witnessed outside of a theatre. The trouble, whatever it was, was righted by a visit to the gas works, and after the lapse of fifteen or twenty minutes the lights shone as brilliant as usual. At the Episcopal Church as the final amen was uttered all the lights went out, leaving the audience to grope their way to the doors in total darkness. The M. E. Church fared no better, the lights all going out while the pastor was in the midst of the service.—Cecil Democrat.

The Punctual Candidate.

Judge David Key, of Tennessee, told a good story of a man in the mountain region of his State, who was a stereotype candidate for local office of all descriptions, but who would never give a decided opinion upon any question. On one occasion when he was a candidate for the position of sheriff there was great excitement on the enforcement of the school tax. He addressed quite a gathering at a muster, but evaded the only question that the audience wanted to hear about, and just as he was closing a fellow in the crowd shouted:

"Tell us about the school tax. Are you for it, or are you not?"

The crowd cheered, and the orator, thus pressed for a declaration of opinion said:

"Gentlemen, you have a right to ask for an answer. I have no concealment to make. I am a frank man, and to you I say in all frankness, if it is a good thing I am for it, and if it is a bad thing I am agin it.'—Ben Perley Poore.

Cure for Chapped Hands.

The easiest and simplest remedy is found in every household. Take common starch and grind it with a knife until it is reduced to the smoothest powder. Take a clean box and fill it with starch thus prepared. Every time the hands are taken from the suds or dish water wipe them, and while they are yet damp rub a portion of starch thoroughly over them, covering the whole surface. The effect is magical. The rough smarting skin is cooled, soothed and healed, bringing and insuring the greatest degree of comfort and freedom from this by no means insignificant trial.

It was on the eve of the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. Said she—"I do hope if anybody is going to give us anything it will be in money. When we were married we were ignorant, and we didn't find out immediately that seven sugar spoons and thirteen ice-pitchers were not essential to marital bliss, but I think we've been married long enough by this time to know how to pick out our own presents."
