[Official Report of State Board of Agriculture.]

FERTILIZER.

No Economy or Protection in Home-Mixing.

A number of our correspondents have asked our advice as to the economy of purchasing the chemicals and mixing their own fertilizers. To such inquiries we have to reply that we fail to see how it is more economical. It is true that the consumer can claim that he knows just what goes into the fertilizer, and in just what proportions, but we fail to see how this claim can be supported, for, if he knows just what he puts in, it is because he depends upon the guarantee or assertion of the person from whom he buys the materials, and we fail to see any advantage this gives him. If he must depend upon the honesty of the dealer for the composition of each of three or four ingredients, he may as well depend upon his honesty for the composition of the mixture. The opportunity for fraud is as wide with each of the ingredients as it is with the mixture. All will admit that a manufacturer, with proper facilities can mix one thousand tons much more cheaply (from the same ingredients) than the farmer can mix one or two tons on his barn floor, and, at the same time, do it much better and completely. One of our correspondents, in reply, claims that the manufacturer may add coal dust or some cheap material to the mixture; but to this our reply is that he may just as readily adulterate any one or all of the ingredients and reach the same end.

Something about Pneumonia.

Pneumonia usually begins with a chill, intense and prolonged, generally at night, and followed by a correspondingly high fever and sharp pains in the sides. The disease is very rapid in its progress, reaching a crisis in from five to six days and sometimes causing death within three days. Usually but one lung is affected, and often the disease is confined to a single lobe. A person may have "double pneumonia," or pneumonia of both lungs, and recover from it, but the chances are against him. When the disease spreads to all of the lung lobes death is certain, as the patient cannot breathe and dies of suffocation. The diseased lung, at first inflamed, soon becomes hard and leathery, and incapable of performing its natural functions. A curious fact is that usually no second chill occurs when another lobe is attacked, and there appears to be no relation between the amount of lung affected and the intensity of the symptoms. All physicians agree in saying that the disease is not contagious, but may be epidemic, and it has been noticed that it is developed under the same conditions as diphtheria—that is, the conditions which produce diphtheria in the young are apt to cause pneumonia among adults. Without speculating upon these different theories, from what has been said in which all agree, it is plain that anything which lowers the vitality of the system is conducive to the disease and should be carefully avoided. Overwork, either physical or mental, has much to do with it, and this explains why so many business men and brain workers become its victims. Sudden changes of the weather and draughts of all kinds are also to be guarded against. In a word, live temperately, dress warmly, avoiding all manner of imprudence, and you need have no fear of pneumonia.

The Value of Willow Wood.

On account of its comparative incombustibility, the willow is eminently useful for the floors of building designed to be fire-proof. It grows to a large size and furnishes a great amount of lumber. There is a white willow growing at Stockbridge, Mass., which at four feet from the ground, measures twenty-two feet in circumference and extends its branches fifty feet in every direction. Tradition says it was brought from Connecticut in 1807 by a traveler, who used it as a riding switch.

The Hon. Jesse W. Fell, in giving an account of experiments in tree planting on an extensive scale in Illinois, says: "Were I called upon to designate one tree which, more than all others, I would recommend for general planting, I would say unhesitatingly, it should be white willow." Professor Brewer says: "In England, where it is often sixty or seventy feet high in twenty years, there is no wood in greater demand than good willow. It is light, very tough, soft, takes a good finish, will bear more pounding and knocks than any other wood grown there, and hence is used for cricket bats, for floats to paddle wheels of steamers and breakblocks on cars. It is used extensively for turning planking, coasting vessels, furniture, ox-yokes, wooden legs, shoe lasts," etc.

Fuller says: "It groweth incredibly fast, it being a by-word that the profit by willows will buy the owner a horse before that by any other tree will pay for a saddle." The basket willow well cultivated, will yield a net income of $150 a year to the acre. On the whole, therefore, it would seem that the various kinds of willow, the economic value of which has been heretofore entirely overlooked in our country, are eminently deserving of attention, and will amply reward those who cultivate them.

Luck in a Horseshoe.

The old notion that there is luck in a horseshoe finds support in one case at least. When Maud S. did her first really fast mile at Cleveland in 2.10¾, Capt. Stone, of Cincinnati, who owned her, pulled off her shoes and stored them in his desk, and sold the mare to Vanderbilt for a snug price. He has been making money ever since and capturing the best things of life. The captain kept only one of the shoes. He gave one to Mrs. Swain, and she gave it to her larger brother. He hadn't had it a week before he was married to one of the most charming ladies in New York. He has been prospering like a green bay tree ever since, and has had the shoe plated and framed and wouldn't take a Florida lot for it. Mr. Vanderbilt had one of the shoes, and used to think it had a happy influence on his efforts to turn an honest penny. Cornelius owns it now, and has it fastened on the front of his writing table. The fourth shoe is in possession of William Blair, Maud S.'s driver. Blair thinks that if he had not had the shoe stuffed in the ballast of his silky cushions he never would have been able to have gotten the work out of the little mare that he has since the piece of steel came into his possession.

Local Option in Washington.

Senator Colquitt of Georgia has introduced into the Senate a bill establishing local option in the District of Columbia. The bill provides in detail for a vote by the people upon the question and is extremely rigorous. Under its provisions no intoxicating liquors can be manufactured within the District of Columbia, or imported therein, and if it becomes a law, no wines can be used at the State dinners of the President. The bill has been submitted to several senators and representatives, and it is said that its main features have been approved by many of them. Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, and Hoar, of Massachusetts, are quoted as saying that they will favor it.

A Practical Test.

Not long ago a rambling Chicago communist gathered a crowd and entertained them with his diatribes on the inequalities of riches and poverty. He was in the midst of his fiery declarations that the capital of the rich belonged to the laboring classes, when a clear voice arose from the crowd: "You've got a gold watch, and I hav'n't any. I want your's." The speaker was nonplussed. Recovering himself, however, he said: "I bought this watch and paid for it." "Don't make any difference," persisted the voice, "you've got a gold watch, I hav'n't, I want it." The talker was checkmated, and the meeting broke up.

Some time ago a St. Louis theatre manager offered a reward to the boy who could sit the longest on a chunk of ice in front of the theatre. Twelve chunks of ice were placed in a row on the curbstone, and about a thousand boys gathered to compete for the frigid honors, but the Humane Society's officers appeared upon the scene just as the matinee was about to commence and sat on the manager. One boy, who went there with determination in his eye and rubber lining in the seat of his trousers, did not thank the officious humane man for his interference.
