Kent News.

SATURDAY MORNING.........MARCH 20, 1886.

Her Majesty of Burmah.

After an hour or more the Queen came, the women prostrating themselves as she entered. She is only 22 years old, unusually fair for a Burmese, and shy like a schoolgirl. She had been told that I was a royal lady, or at least she was so made to understand from the fact of the statement that I was "an American, and that every American is noble born!" Sister Emelia presented me, and I was seated in front of her Majesty, she sitting on a purple velvet cushion. My presents were mentioned, and a maid handed me a piece of silk—the Queen's gift. This formality over, the Queen plied me with questions, and indulged in general conversation for perhaps ten or fifteen minutes. Then the interview came to an end. When the Queen left the princesses clustered around me, inquiring how I liked their royal mistress. Poor things, how they smiled at my praise! There are about forty of them, but they are not concubines. All, I understand, are daughters of the late king, who had fifty-three wives and one hundred and ten children. The sons were put out of Thebaw's way except two, who fled to British territory, and the daughters were immured like nuns in the palace, marriage being prohibited them, and each one having her separate dwelling in the palace inclosure. The Queen, who is the only wife, treats them very kindly. In fact, her Majesty is noted for her urbanity, this being due in no small measure to the influence of Mother Theresa, who was her Majesty's music teacher, and who is all powerful at the court. The Queen has a piano, a Weber grand, on which she plays "sacred music." There are all sorts of patent things in the palace—sewing machines, a balloon, a stove, a force pump, etc.—but the piano is the only invention in use.—Hartford Times.

Why Hancock Died Poor.

Surprise is expressed, asserts a New York correspondent, that General Hancock did not leave a larger estate behind him, but he was generous to a fault, and he had many calls upon his charity. It was the heavy cross of his life that his twin brother, for thirty years resident of a distant Western city, had disappointed his expectations, lost his ambition and sunk into a living death. His brother was a lawyer, one of the most brilliant in the Northwest, clearing from $15,000 to $20,000 a year by his practice, when he fell a victim to his love for good company and good cheer. He went down from his high position like a rocket, and for the last fifteen years has been been entirely supported by his brother, the general. There is a touching little bit of romance connected with this sad story. The lawyer was in his prime, a magnificent looking man, and became engaged to the beautiful daughter of a lady in whose house he boarded. The engagement began twenty-two years ago. But the lady saw danger ahead and she refused to marry her ardent and handsome wooer until he would forswear the flowing bowl and show himself a thoroughly reformed man. He still lives in the same house, and the lady is there too and still unwedded. She is true to her love, but is equally true to her promise, and, while she tenderly cares for the man she loves and mourns, she knows that her life is wrecked, and that there is no hope now on this side of the grave. The world is full of such unnoticed heroines.

A Young Lady's Idea of Marriage.

Here is an extract from the writings of Charles Reade, which will doubtless be read with general interest: "So she was going to be married; to be mistress of a house, to settle in London; to be able to go out in the streets all alone, to shop or visit; have a gentleman all her own, whom she could put her finger on any moment, and make him take her about, even to the opera and the theatre; to give dinner parties her own self, and even a little ball once in a way; to buy whatever dresses she thought proper, instead of being crippled by an allowance; have the legal right of speaking first in society, instead of sitting mum-chance and mock-modest; to be mistress instead of miss—contemptible title; to be a woman instead of a girl, and all this rational liberty, domestic power, and social dignity were to be obtained by merely wedding a dear fellow who loved her, and who was so nice; and the bright career to be ushered in with several delights, each of them dear to a very soul; presents from all our friends; as many new dresses as if one was changing her body, or her hemisphere, instead of her name; going to church, which is a good English girl's theatre of display and vanity, and there tasting delightful publicity and whispered admiration, in a heavenly long veil, which she could not wear even once if she remained single."

Preparation of the Soil.

The proper preparation of the soil to fit it for a crop involves a variety of processes, the most important of which are the loosening of the soil by plowing or digging, and the communication or pulverizing of it to allow the roots easily to run through it and to take up their nutriment from it. Subsoil plowing is a most necessary operation whenever the subsoil is heavy and retentive. Vegetables and fruits, as much as the grain crops require deep working of the soil. A moderately heavy soil that has been underdrained and subsoiled, and then carefully worked, is capable of producing the heaviest crops. A deep, rich soil is wonderfully favorable to a bank account. All the processes in the preparation of a piece of land for a crop require good tools, and in their purchase the aim should be to get the best. A good tool will quickly pay for itself, but a poor one is very expensive. A man must be well off who can afford to use poor tools. While a good plow will do better work than a poor one, it also enables the team to do more of it. Tools and implements should not only be of the best kinds, but they should be carefully kept in order, and be clean and bright and be stored in a proper place where they can always be found when wanted, without running across lots to find them where they were thrown when last used.

He Ought to be Thankful.

The Rev. John Lindsey, now preaching in Richmond county, N. Carolina, was born four months after his mother had been pronounced dead and was buried. His mother, to all appearances, died and was buried in Stewartsville Cemetery. The night following her interment persons, for the purpose of securing the jewelry buried with the body, unearthed the remains, when consciousness returned and she was enabled to return to her home. Arriving at her late residence, she rapped at the door, and was answered by her husband, who was overjoyed to meet again in life his beloved wife, whom he had mourned as dead. Four months afterwards Rev. Mr. Lindsey was born. The mother survived several years. This statement is made by Rev. Mr. Lindsey, and is literally true.

A MUSICIAN, in giving notice of an intended concert, thus expressed it: "During the evening a number of songs may be expected, too tedious to mention."
