Mr Easter

Dear sir when I wrote last I was so distressed about my disappointments I thought it would not be worth while to mention africa again and said I would ponder it in my heart but the cause is too great to be confined to such a cell as my broken heart — I am truly sorry to have so poor account of the thirty dolls and feel anxious to heare from the letter and box which I sent to Mrs Chandlee you say they went on but she is dead & her tears are over God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform.

I have thought that I was stationed for life but a voice from the burning bush seems to say take your slaves & your nieces go to africa to help Mrs Wilson to point the poor heathen to the lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world now if I knew how to make my arrangements I think I should be willing to go indeed I see an evil
