IN THE CYCLONE'S GRIP!

Graphic Account of the Awful Storm that Swept Over Minnesota.

The following graphic account of the terrible cyclone in Minnesota last week that almost entirely destroyed two towns, killed fifty people, and injured hundreds of others, is dated "St. Cloud, Minn., April 15."

"We can never read of these terrible visitations in the Western country without congratulating ourselves that we are free from them in this latitude."

It was a few minutes after 4 o'clock when the sky became overcast with a dark cloud and a great black mass rose over the hills southwest of the city, coming with terrible velocity toward the city, and was accompanied by a loud roar, hoarse, shrilling, and a low, rumbling sound, and cracking and crashing sound that resembled a conflagration in its fury. The cloud was funnel-shaped and the point dragged along the ground like the tail of a huge aerial snake, sending every thing that came in its path into atoms. Citizens had hardly time to flee to their cellars and seek other points of refuge before the whirlwind was upon them and the air was filled with flying boards, shingles, bricks and other debris, that were strewn over the country and piled in tremendous heaps.

The intense excitement prevailed. Women and children fled from their houses and rushed blindly about in the midst of the dark cloud. Men stood about in groups, looking on with horror. Men lost their presence of mind and stood in silence and inactivity in the presence of the wild demon that was tearing its way through the city in all its fury and people were not aware of their danger before it was upon them and they fell the great walls before a "cyclone." It had hardly begun its terrible work before it was finished, and the scene that greeted the eyes of those who had escaped its fury was one that caused the stoutest hearts to shudder. Cries and shrieks of the wounded rent the air and the ground was covered with the bodies of the dead. Among them were stalwart men, weak women, and weaker children. Citizens thrust to a mass of the demolished districts, and, summoning physicians, began the work of rescuing those who were still living from beneath the piles of dirt and fallen buildings.

In the track of the cyclone stood the Manitoba freight-house and cars filled with freight. Down on them this whirlwind passed, and grasping its cars lifted them from the tracks and cast them to pieces in a single moment. The iron rails were torn from the ties and twisted into the smallest wires. Telegraph poles were up and the wires twisted into various positions. The freight house was totally wrecked. The roof was lifted and blown several hundred feet; the sides next to the tracks were over 25 feet high and were piled over an area of a quarter of a mile. Fifty freight cars were demolished. The operators in the telegraph office and employees at the freight depots saw the cyclone coming and fled into the cellar, and thus escaped.

The scene in the hospital was heartrending. Men, women and children lay in broken shrouds, bathed in their own blood, and faces blackened and gray, and arms and legs broken, scalps torn and bodies lacerated.

The scene at the engine house was more horrible. Eighty engine bodies were stretched on the floor in two rows, draped in sheets and blankets, while around and among them moved men with their hands uncovering faces, trying to recognize in the distorted features some familiar face in which they might trace relationship. The bodies were black with dirt and gravel and were torn and mangled. The faces were swollen and bloated with blood from gaping wounds and covered with mud.

The report which came from Rice's station, about twelve miles from here, was that a house which was a wedding party was struck by the cyclone and twenty people killed, including the bride and groom. It is certain that there was considerable loss of life in the village. The loss to the city is estimated at from $125,000 to $150,000.
