I have visited the Colored people at their friends, have addressed them in Baltimore, assembled, and Called Select meetings, at which those who have been regarded as their best friends amongst the whites have accompanied me; at these meetings the whole subject has been canvassed, and their friends have urged them to emigrate, but all to no purpose. So far as I have gone on this Shore, I do not believe there will be a Single emigrant. I have resolved however to do my duty, and leave events with Him who Controls all the events.

I sincerely fear that the same gloom which has been spread here, with consequences so fatal to my hopes, has been also diffused in other neighbourhoods of the State, if so, the prospects for the Spring expedition are by no means flattering.

I am sincerely
