SATURDAY MORNING.....Dec. 18, 1886.

LETTER FROM STILL POND.

The Late Peach Season – Lessons Taught—The Exchange System – The New Hotel, &c. – The Death of John B. Parrott.

STILL POND, MD., Dec. 6, 1886.

Messrs. Editors Kent News:—It has been some time since I had the pleasure of contributing to your columns, my only excuse being "business before pleasure." We emerged from the hurry and tumult of peach season with purses not filled to overflowing with filthy lucre, but somewhat wiser with one more year's experience in marketing this important and valuable crop. We started out the beginning of the season with high hopes and encouraging prospects of good prices and for a time our most sanguine expectations were realized.

It was our fortune to be located near the exchange at Barnard's wharf, where purchasers from many of our principal cities far and near located themselves and commenced business at once by bidding briskly upon fruit offered for sale. The competition often became exciting and determined and fifty cents to one dollar and a-half per basket were the ruling prices paid for the first eight or ten days. Then came the crash, the glut; hot and sultry weather set in and the fruit arrived in market in bad order and prices ruled very low. Many growers shifted from day to day from one market to another in hopes of realizing better prices. Some days they would sell mainly through the exchange and from what I can learn obtained better prices almost universally than they did in shipping.

The exchange taught us one very important lesson, viz: To always cull our fruit, making it of uniform quality. Fruit not properly culled would not command half the price of that rightly assorted, and sometimes no bid would be made on such. We are forced to the conclusion that the exchange system was a success and many of us are determined to leave no stone unturned to make it a perpetual institution here.

Our Agricultural and Horticultural Club passed a resolution at its last meeting to invite all its members and all peach growers in the county who are interested, to meet with us the 2d Saturday in January, at 2 o'clock P. M., at the town hall in Still Pond, to give their experience in marketing this year's crop of fruit. Come prepared to give in figures the net returns for fruit sold through the exchange, and that shipped to other markets, so we may, by comparison, arrive at some definite conclusion as to plans in the future for the sale of this product.

Many of us believe that a railroad through Still Pond, on down the neck is not impracticable, if we are not mistaken in the signs of the times, and the encouragement railroad officials give us. The time for action is at hand by agitating this subject while we have leisure, which will prepare us for carrying out the project in the spring. All should be interested in this enterprise, be he peach grower or not, in this section and make the invitation general.

Our new hotel is now finished and the barn and stable under contract. Mr. John W. Robinson is our genial and accommodating landlord. We had the pleasure of dining with him recently and the table was all that an epicure could desire. The furniture is all new, and a more attractive house and appointments we have not seen on the peninsula, and we bespeak for him success in his laudable undertaking. Cost of hotel and stabling about $5,500.

The citizens of Still Pond have just been treated to a literary feast. The Grand Lodge of Good Templars have just closed its sessions here; Many bright and shining lights were in attendance and the season was indeed an enjoyable one and one long to be remembered.

Our village was thrown into a high state of excitement at the unexpected and sudden death of our most respected and honored citizen, Mr. John B. Parrott, who was stricken with apoplexy at an early hour on Saturday morning, Dec. 4. He was a man universally respected, unexceptional in character, and noted for his fidelity to truth and justice; his loss is irreparable to those friends who have known him best. We offer the beloved family our sincere and heartfelt condolence. OBSERVER.

Small Neighborhood Farmers' Clubs.

I have made a careful study of "farmers' clubs," and how to conduct them, for ten years, and in so doing have changed my former views considerably. I at first advocated county or township clubs as the best possible organization for the farmer. I have attended some of the best county clubs to be found anywhere, and I have never seen one that I thought would compare with the local clubs with which I am familiar. In the large club the attendance is always irregular and the talking is sure to be done by the few. It is probably impossible to get a hundred or more men together in an organization without getting some who are windy and verbose, and in the large organization the timid who most need the training that preparation for, and participation in, the discussion would furnish, are given no chance. The best farmers' club in my estimation is made up of twelve or thirteen families, enough so they can meet once a month, and get round in a year meeting at the homes of the members. It is well to have one extra family, so that in case of sickness or any good reason why a family cannot take the club at the time assigned the extra family can take it. The advantages of the small club are: 1st. The members are all thoroughly acquainted with each other from the start. 2d. The attendance is sure to be regular, for in a small organization of this kind each member knows he will be missed, and ten years' observation in two clubs of this kind has shown me that a member is rarely absent unless unavoidably detained. 3d. In such a club every member is put on duty. The president assigns to the members their parts for each meeting and sees that all are called out, and every member takes part, and even the most timid soon find it easy to do duty. Our programme is prepared a year in advance and printed, in which is given the place and time of meeting and the topics and various sub-topics to be discussed.—W. F. Brown in Stockman.

DR. HAWKS, an eloquent and popular divine, once asked the vestrymen of his church to increase his salary because of his increased family expenses. "Don't trouble yourself," said the vestrymen, "the Lord has said, He will care for the young ravens when they cry." "I know that," said the clergyman, "but nothing is said about the young Hawks."

A NEWSPAPER paragraphist tried a typewriter for the first time the other day. He slowly manipulated the keys until he reached the end of a line and when he heard the bell sound to reverse, he exclaimed, with an injured look: "You can ring your darn old chestnut bell but that joke's original all the same!"
