SATURDAY MORNING.........FEB. 5, 1887.

FRIGHTENED TO DEATH.

Strange Fate Which Overtook a Man Who Married a Second Time.

When on her death bed three months ago Eva Hebron, of Boundbrook, N. J., warned her husband not to marry again if he valued his peace of mind. Before Mrs. Hebron passed away she obtained her sorrowful husband's solemn promise that he would live and die a widower. The wife died contented, and was duly buried. A short time afterward Mr. Hebron married again, taking unto himself a buxom widow of forty summers.

But the neighbor remarked that he was restless and seemed unwell. He said himself that he could not sleep. One night he was awakened from an uneasy slumber by an alarm of fire. He leaped out of bed, and going to the window, saw the Episcopal Church in flames. He watched the darting flames for a moment, and then staggered back with an expression of horror. His wife asked what was the matter, but he did not appear to hear her. A strange fascination seemed to hold him. Suddenly he shrank back again, placed his hands before his eyes, as if to shut out an awful vision, and thembled in every limb.

"See," he cried, "see the spirit of my dead wife come back to haunt me. Oh, Eva, why do you reproach me. Oh, God," he shrieked, "deliver me from this awful curse. See how she sheers and mutters 'as you loved me in life, as you cheerish my memory, as you value your piece of mind, I charge you never to marry again.' Don't look at me so, Eva. Your eyes will kill me. Forgive me, Eva. Do not scorn me. Oh, God, can the dead thus return to the world to tantalize those who have wronged them? Heavens! She brings an army of ghastly creatures to end my life! Ten thousand devils, how they jeer and gribe! merciful God!"

The terrified man fell prostrate to the floor with a pitiful moan and fainted. From that night Hebron believed he was a doomed man. His dreams were hideous, his wakeful moments frighful. There always hovered about him, it seemed to his imagination, the haunting spirit of his buried wife. Darkness and daylight were the same, the same shawdow was ever present.

The man became a monimaniac. One morning his countenance looked more ghastly than ever, and he told his friends he had had a horrible dream. He thought Eva's skeleton lay by his side. The idea frenzied him. He leaped from his bed, but the spectre follwed. At length it pinioned him to the wall with one long bony finger. He thought he felt his life blood ooze from his pierced heart and drip to the floor. Then he thougt his departed wife licked up his fast flowing blood with ghoulish greed.

"So," she screamed, "I sup the vitality of my false husband."

This story convinced Hebron's friends that he was insane, and steps were about to be taken to have him removed to an asylum, when one morning last week he was found dead in bed. No one disputed that he had died from sheer fright. His neighbors do not believe that he was insane, but they think that he was over superstitious. Hebron left a will, recently made, dividing a few thousand dollars' worth of property between his wife and his sister. Mrs. Hebron has decided to contest the will on the ground that her late husband was insane when he made.

Tradition of the Temple.

There is a beautiful tradition connected with the site on which the temple of Solomon was erected. It is said to have been occupied in common by two brothers, one of whom had a family, the other had none. On the evening succeeding the harvest, the wheat having been gathered in shocks, the elder brother said to his wife, "My younger brother is unable to bear the burden and heat of the day; I will arise, take off my shocks and place them with his without his knowledge."

The younger brother, being actuated by the same benevolent motives, said within himself, "My elder brother has a family, and I have none; I will contribute to their support; I will arise, take off my shocks and place them with his without his knowledge."

Judge then of their mutual astonishment when, on the following morning, they found their respective shocks undiminished. This course of events transpired for several nights, when each resolved in his own mind to guard and solve the mystery. They did so, when on the following night they met each other half way between their respective shocks with their arms full.

Upon ground hallowed by such associations as this was the temple of King Solomon erected—so spacious, so magnificent, the wonder and admiration of the world. Alas! in these days how many would sooner steal their brother's whole shock than add to it a single sheaf.
