SATURDAY MORNING.....Mar. 5, 1887.

MEADVILLE.

Messrs Editors: — Nestling in the valley of Franklin creek and surrounded by towering hills the city of Meadville presents a landscape of beauty rarely excelled. In every direction are fertile fields and beautiful forest-covered slopes overlooking the city. Winding down the valley the waters of French creek may be traced until they are lost amid the shrubbery and forests bordering the banks of the stream.

David Mead founded this place in 1793. Afterwards he was associate judge of Crawford county, and from 1803 to 1816 was major-general of the Sixteenth Division Pennsylvania militia. A story is current that while he was laying out this town a Henry Marley was his chain-bearer; starting at what is now known as the head of Water street and running south; cutting out the hazel brush as they went. Late in the afternoon, before they reached the point where the mill-run crosses Water street, Mr. Mead looked at his watch and exclaimed, "Well, Henry, we'll stop here. I guess the town will never go farther south than this creek." But great would be the old general's surprise if he were to return now and view the city he founded ninety-four years ago.

The man who has done the most towards building up this city is H. J. Hudekoper, who settled here in 1805 and entered upon his duties as agent of the Holland Land Company and through misrepresentation, as some claim, was able to buy from the company an extensive tract of land here at a comparatively small figure and enriched himself by holding it. His son, Frederick Hudekoper, is living here now, and though worth over a million of dollars has devoted his life to literary pursuits; for twenty years he held a professorship in the theological school here and has three works of great merit published, viz: "Belief of the First Three Centuries Concerning Christ's Mission to the Underworld," "Judaism at Rome" and "Indirect Testimony of History to the Genuineness of the Gospel." He is Unitarian in belief and the church of that denomination here is known as Hudekoper's Church. We received the compliments of his good wife in the shape of a season ticket to the festivals held at this church once a month the year around.

In 1817 Allegheny College was founded here under adverse circumstances, but now has an average attendance of three hundred pupils; admitting both sexes. The buildings and grounds, including sixteen acres, are valued at $75,000; library $20,000; cabinets $50,000; apparatus $15,000; permanent invested fund $160,000; total $320,000. This institution reminds us of Washington College, being similar in number of buildings and appearance and situated upon an eminence overlooking the town in like manner.

Meadville Theological School was founded in 1844 and is patronized principally by Unitarians. In 1854 what is known as Divinity Hall was erected at an expense of $16,500, and has a library of 15,000 volumes; its total valuation, including $23,000 trust fund, is $224,442. Ten thousand dollars was donated this institution by Enoch Pratt, of Baltimore.

Meadville Business College was established in 1865 and is a link in the Bryant & Stratton chain; it has an average attendance of about one hundred pupils.

This city is lighted and heated by natural gas from the oil regions of Titusville, twenty-eight miles distant. This gas is conveyed over a hundred miles through pipes to the various towns and cities through this section. It is very cheap, costing but fifty cents per month for fire and ten cents for gas jet. In heating large buildings a furnace is used and is heated with steam by pipes running to the various rooms, as is the building where we are, there being about sixty rooms and about half of them constantly heated and lighted at a total cost of four dollars per month.

Although it snowed here all of January, the ground is now clear and grass and wheat looking green; the latter looking better than it usually looks in Kent at this season of the year. The late fall and heavy rainfalls they had in this section last year conduced to its growth.

The farmers in this section are largely engaged in the manufacture of maple sugar. The trees grow about as large as oaks and the sap is obtained by boring holes in the trunk; each tree giving about two water-bucketsful. This month is the time to tap them. Peter Poker.
