Scientific American Office,
128 Fulton Street, New York.

Dear Sir:

With the commencement of each Volume of the Scientific American it has been our custom to send out a prospectus to every newspaper in the United States. We regret to notice in a few instances that our motives have been impugned, under a misapprehension that we proposed an exchange demanding a balance in our favor in advertising. We state in our Circular to Editors, that we will send the Scientific American without an Exchange, to any newspaper that published the prospectus twice or more.

The Scientific American being the only weekly journal of the kind in this Country, we may safely aver that its interests clash with no other paper; hence, owing to its peculiar field of labor, it is in some measure a useful exchange, and under any other system than one of favoritism we should find an exchange list greater than we could afford. Your experience will lead you to conclude with us on this point, and we hope to merit a continuance of your friendly regard. The enclosed prospectus is for our Tenth Volume, and if you choose to accept our proposition, we will send you the complete numbers of the Volume without an exchange.

Wishing you every success,

We remain,

Truly Yours,

Munn & Co

P. S. Should you publish the prospectus, please send marked copy of the paper containing it and advise us of any omission on our part.
