NEW YORK FASHIONS

The Obnoxious Small Hat; Charming Lingerie Hats; Prince Chap Jackets; Lingerie Dresses; Figured Net Waists; Silk Waists; Linen and Lawn Etons.

The "run" upon the small hat with turn-down brim (for ordinary street wear) is one of those unaccountable freaks of Fashion, which confronts one almost every season. Far removed from anything like grace or beauty, it has been as eagerly caught up as if it were a charming creation. Unusually of ecru straw, and set back from the face on a pom padour roll, the ensemble is distressing to a person of true taste. Often times a wing or quill adds to the bizarre outline and oftentimes a large cluster of flowers at either side, gives a saddlelike effect—anything but pleasing.

LINGERIE HATS.

Lingerie hats charm the beholder, with their soft lace or batiste embroidery frills, and satin ribbon bows or loops, with flowers disposed at option, or sometimes an entire wreath; then again one or two single flowers are placed anywhere that may prove becoming. These hats are easily made at home, the shirred brim being the only part requiring any special skill. One of tucking throughout is attractive, and if one possesses three or four lace sprays, they can be utilized on the crown. If an expensive and elegant hat is desired, a large Leghorn or chip, trimmed with white velvet and white ostrich plumes, or white taffeta silk is available. Large roses and white plumes are in fashionable favor, or flowers and velvet. Colored feathers in two or three shades on black chip afford the brilliant coloring design by some brunettes.

THE PRINCE CHAP COAT.

This natty jacket is seen on many Spring suits, prettily trimmed with rows of buttons in line effect on the skirt, bust, pocket and sleeves, of course with buttons of considerable size at the front. It is made in a variety of materials—silks, serge or brilliantine, the former of heavy quality or lined.

THINNER FABRICS

such as French voile, the Eton is preferable, and no more stylish trimming can be had than braiding on a silk band around the skirt on the jacket and three quarter sleeves. It is certainly somewhat early to foretell Fall styles and fabrics, but those who dwell in the innermost circle are positive that silk will be the material for next season,, and the cordial approbation extended to the "Mirage de Fantaisie" in the early Spring was due to its peculiar beauty and excellent wearing qualities. It is well adapted to the present clinging styles and its shadowy surface in all fashionable hues, imparts special charm.

The above design is by the McCall Co. of New York, Publishers of Fashion and Manufacturers of McCall Patterns.

LINGERIE DRESSES.

These are very much the result of individual taste, and white, pink or pale blue lawn skirts are traversed in any and all directions by bands of batiste embroidery and narrow lace. Embroidered bands (white) on pale blue or pink are a change from the all white, and needless to say, waist and sleeves are in harmony with the skirt. Lingerie waists continue "the rage" with independent skirts of voile, canvas or silk, and they still button in the back to the inconvenience of most feminines. The China silk waist still flourishes, the fronts tucked or formed of lace insertion.

FIGURED NET

waists trimmed with heavy lace, as yokes, plastrons or simple bands are really new, but only suitable to a handsome skirt. The variety of dotted foulard waists now on view is an additional proof (if one is needed) of the stronghold on popular favor. Just at present, they are an accessory to tailor suits, but when warm weather comes, they will aspire to the dignity of independent waists.

CHARMING LITTLE ETONS.

Fascinating little white linen Etons trimmed with embroidery or handwork, are brought out for ornament rather than use suitable to any kind of morning or early afternoon dress. Others are of corded pique, also ornamented with French dots or embroidery. A third style is in very sheer lawn with narrow lace insertion. As may be understood, these little fascinators are only appropriate to young people.
