ILL WIFE ON SAILBOAT.

Oysterman Rigs Up Vessel And She Goes For Operation In City.

To save his wife, who was stricken ill with appendicitis, Capt. John K. Kernan, an oysterman, who lives near Rock Hall, rigged up his sailboat Sunday morning and, after placing supplies aboard, carried his spouse aboard the craft and placed her in the cabin. He then turned the prow of the little craft toward Baltimore and, with the aid of favorable winds, arrived in Baltimore Sunday night in time to get Mrs. Kernan to the University Hospital to be operated upon.

Dr. Robert P. Bay performed the operation, which was successful. Peritonitis later developed, however, and her condition is critical, although it is thought she will recover.

Mrs. Kernan became ill Saturday. After an examination it was found that Mrs. Kernan had appendicitis and that an operation was necessary. There were no boats from Rock Hall scheduled to leave in time to bring her to the city, and then it was that the oysterman prepared his craft for the journey.
