ATTEMPT TO KILL ROOSEVELT

John Schrank, of New York, The Colonel's Would-be Assassin.

Milwaukee, Wis., October 14.—Colonel Roosevelt was shot in the breast and slightly wounded tonight as he was leaving the Gilpatrick Hotel for the Auditorum to make a speech. The wound was apparently not serious and the Colonel went on to the hall and began his speech after he had seen his assailant arrested and taken to the police station.

Six physicians examined Colonel Roosevelt's wound. They found it impossible to determine the depth to which the bullet had penetrated, and it was decided to take an x-ray photograph.

After the Colonel had completed his speech, which he made despite protests of his friends, he consented to go to the hospital. At 11.30 he emerged from the hospital, walking unassisted and saying "I am feeling fine."

At midnight he left for Chicago.

The prisoner told the police, after an hour's examination, that he was John Schrank, of 370 East Tenth street, New York.

At 10.30 Colonel Roosevelt was sitting on the operating table talking politics with the physicians while they were waiting the arrival of an x-ray machine.

Colonel Roosevelt's life probably was saved by a manuscript of the speech which he delivered tonight. The bullet struck the manuscript, which retarded its force as it passed through into the flesh. His assailant was prevented from firing a second shot by Albert H. Martin, one of Colonel Roosevelt's two secretaries. Colonel Roosevelt had just stepped into an automobile when the would-be assassin pushed his way through the crowd in the street and fired. Martin, who was standing in the car with the Colonel, leaped onto the man's shoulders and bore him to the ground.

THE ASSAILANT CAUGHT.

Capt. A. O. Girard, of Milwaukee, who was on the front seat, jumped almost at the same time, and in an instant the man was overpowered and disarmed.

A wild cry of "Lynch him" went up. Colonel Roosevelt spoke to the people and told them to spare the man, who then was taken into the hotel and held there until he was removed to the police station.

The man, who is small of stature, admitted firing the shot and said that "any man looking for a third term ought to be shot."

WOULD SPEAK OR DIE.

In spite of the entreaties of physicians Colonel Roosevelt insisted upon delivering his address.

"I will make this speech or die, one or the other," he said.

The colonel felt no pain at the time the shot was fired, and was not aware that he was shot until he was on the way to the Auditorium. His attention was then called to a hole in his overcoat, and he found that his shirt was soaked with blood. He insisted that he was not hurt badly. A superficial examination of the wound was made when he reached the Auditorium, and three physicians agreed that he was in no immediate danger.

NEARLY A PANIC.

Henry F. Cochems, one of the Wisconsin Progressive leaders, told the great crowd which had assemble in the auditorium, that Colonel Roosevelt had deen shot and asked the people to be calm. The crowd was thrown almost into a panic by the announcement, but Colonel Roosevelt calmed the people.

The bullet had made a round hole in the thick manuscript. It had gone on into the fleshy part of the chest and had lodged there.

Those on the platform saw a tinge of red about the bullet mark on the manuscript. Dr. Terrill started from his chair, bound on having the Colonel stop and go at once to the hospital. Roosevelt saw him rise from the chair. Turning around, the Colonel exclaimed, impatiently, "You just stay where you are. I am going to make this speech, and you might as well compose yourself."

Terrill had a suspicion all the time that the bullet had found its mark, but he had been balked by the Colonel so that he could not make certain.

BULLET PROOF MANUSCRIPT.

He sat in his chair his face blanched as the Colonel launched into the speech. The audience, thoroughly alarmed over the Colonel's plight, sat with bated breath as the Colonel spoke. Not until the speech was over did the crowd learn that the bullet had pierced the manuscript.

The Colonel talked for 15 minutes before he gave the slightest indication that he felt the effect of the bullet. Then a sudden tinge of pain made him clutch his right side. The audience was quick to observe it, and a protest ran through the hall for the Colonel to stop. Roosevelt frowned.

"Now this is all a trivial affair," he cried. "Any one who knows me must realize that I would not stop for a thing like this. I may have a right to feel sore with a bullet in me, but if you saw me in battle leading my regiment you would not want me to stop. You would expect me to go ahead, no matter what happened."

SPOKE WITH VIGOR.

On into his speech went the Colonel raising his voice to a higher pitch. To hear him speak, with all the vigor he has displayed in his whole campaign, no one would have imagined, had he not known it, that the plucky candidate carried a freshly fired bullet.

Roosevelt strode to one end of the platform and then to the other all the time, closely following the lines of his prepared speech.

As his talk was mainly along lines he has pursued in previous speeches in the Middle West, he knew it well enough to sleep from referring to his notes.

He tucked the manuscript into the folds of his coat, half hid it in his hands and tried by others devices to keep it out of sight of the audience. He did not want the bullet hole to be in evidence.

While the Colonel was on his way to the hospital, which is 10 blocks away from the Auditorium, a message was sent to Mr. Roosevelt at Oyster Bay, telling her of the shooting. She was informed that the wound was slight and that the Colonel had gone ahead with his speech suffering no discomfiture, other messages were hurried out to various others of the Colonel's family, including Congressman Nicholas Longworth, in Washington. Another went to George W. Perkins, the Colonel's national manager in New York. All bore the same assuring word, that the wound was not dangerous.
