propriate that money to pay their expense. — That is our proposal. If they will not agree to that, we will take the money for them keep our note, or we will give them a new note in its place, or we will pay them the interest thereon every six months, as we have heretofore done. This will enable us to send our fall expedition, & to use the money over & over again. We can pay the interest without doubt, & the principal when good times come again, or when we wind up. I will not argue this — only to say that I do not see how the money can be made more useful — Yours truly,
