THE WYANDOTTES,

The creed of enthusiastic supporters and better detractors, the breed that has probably had more that is false or only partly true written contradicted and rewritten about it and has been resposible for more bitter feeling among fanciers than any other variety of fowl ever had.

The originator of the Silver Wyandotte the most beautiful of feathered creatures will never definitely be settled. It seems an assured fact, however, that the coming of the breed as a utility fowl is an accident. It was as far as can be ascertained the final outcome of a great many attempts to produce an improved cochin bantam or American sebright. They hied for admission to the standard as American or sebright cochin as early as 1876 but were not admitted. They tried again in 1878 but the various breeders could not agree as to the adoption of the single or rose comb. They were finally admitted in 1883 and it is undoubtedly due to Mr L. Whittaka, of Michigan, who collected the pagnents of the early crosses and developed them into something tangible and thereby laid the foundation upon which the silver Wyandotte of today rests.

The Golden Wyandottes were originated by M. J. Mekeen, of Wisconsin, and at that time there was a Wyandotte craze all over the country and it is doubtful if there ever was or will be such a demand for any one breed.

The White Wyandotte now the most popular of the breed was admitted to standard in 1888 it is most probably a sport from the silver as this variety produces both Black and White sports.

The silver penciled Wyandotte is the creation of Mr. Ezra Cornell, while the origin of the Buff and the Partridge Wyandotte belongs to no one breeder.

The Columbian Wyandotte second to the White in popularity was really introduced before any of the Wyandottes. It was the creation of a New Hampshire fancier and was then called "clean-leg Braham," but it was not until a few years ago when introduced under its present name that it earned its deserves popularity.

The Wyandotte is a bird of cures it, resembles no other breed, there is not a straight line in its form and none could be tolerated. The body is rounded out and full in every section, set low on the legs, the breast being so full as to give the pretty bird the appearance of tipping forward slightly. The comb of the Wyandotte is like no other rose comb and follows very closely the curve of the head.

In that day of the Wyandotte craze the Silver was by far the most popular and the suhply not by any means meeting the demand many unscrupulous breeders sent out stock possessing but little or no worth. The whole Wyandotte family suffered in consequence, and while the White have come back as will always the case with a white bird of any breed thot possesses merit. The Silver the most beautiful and in every respect the best, has never regained the lost ground.

The Wyandotte is of good weight, the standard calling for only 1 lb. less than in the case of Rocks they are probably better layers than the Rocks. They are the right shape to make a good table fowl and as they have the yellow skin and legs so essential to the present marked demands, may safely be classed with the best of the utility breeds.

STRAUS FORWARDS PROTEST TO WILSON

Urges That President Keep Hands Off In Senatorial Campaign.

In President Wilson's mail Saturday was a letter from former Attorney General Isaac Lobe Straus of Maryland, calling his attention to reports in the newspapers of Baltimore relative to the part the President is playing, and intends to play, in controlling the selection of a United States Senator from Maryland.

It has been said that President Wilson was directly responsible for the candidacy of William L. Marbury, and that he intends to throw the whole weight of the Federal Administration back of him in order to encompass the defeat of Senator Smith, whose term of office expires in March, 9115 The Federal patronage that belongs to Maryland has been mentioned as one of the levers to be used by the President in prying Senator Smith lose from his seat.

Mr. Straus is also a candidate for the Senate and desires a free field.

Denies President's Right

The attitude attributed to President Wilson is set forth by Mr. Straus in the letter to the President and then he proceeds to state his objections, taking the broad ground that such a course is absolutely hostile to the principles of home rule which has ever been sacred to the Democratic party. He then proceeds to give in detail the legal and constitutional bars to such action as well as the objections to it from the standpoint of public policy.

Speaking of the announcement that President Wilson intends to use the Federal patornage in advancing the candidacy of Mr. Marbury, Mr. Straus says:

"Every man in the country and none better than you yourself, knows that the President has absolutely not a shred of right to do this.

He declares that the power that pertain to the office of President belongs to the people, and that no man has the right to use it except for the equipment and administration of the affairs of the Government: that if the offices can be used for the purpose set forth then the money in the Treasury can be used for the purpose, and, if the offices and the money are both available, so are the other agencies of Government.

Inquiries Unanswered

Mr. Straus says in his letter that he sent a telegram to the President in Trenton in November before he had assumed the duties of the Presidency inquiring if the reports concerning the President's attitude in the Maryland fight were correct. Receiving no answer he again wired the President in March 1913, after he had taken up the duties of the office. This telegram likewise remained unanswered. Mr. Straus says he waives the consideration from the President to which he thinks he was entitled and takes up the proposition as an entirety, believing it to be too important to be premitted to rest because of any personal discourtesies that may be heaped upon him.

A dispatch from Washington to The News this afternoon says:

"The White House today refused to nswer charges of former Attorney General I a c Lobe Straus, one of the three candidates for the United States Senate from Maryland, that President Wilson is attempting to interfere in the senatorial campaign in that State.
