HOW MIGRATORY BIRD LAW AFFECTS GUNNERS

BY TALBOTT DENMEAD
President Maryland State Game and Fish Protective Association.

The bill, known as the Weeks-McLean bill, providing for Federal control of all migratory birds, which was passed by Congress and signed by the President on March 4, 1913, is probably the greatest piece of bird protection legislation ever passed.

This bill, in part, provided that the control of these migratory birds should be controlled as to open and closed seasons by Uncle Sam and that the Agricultural Department should form regulations governing same and publish them for three months previous to their final adoption, and to hold hearing during said three months in regard to any necessary changes.

These regulations, formed by three men in the Department of Agriculture, who have had 25 years' experience in the study of birds, their habits and bird laws, have just been made public and are of general interest to all bird lovers, farmers and sportsmen.

The proposed regulations as they affect Maryland follow briefly:

No shooting at any migratory bird between sunset and sunrise.

Open season for reedbird September 1 to October 31, inclusive.

Open season for waterfowl November 1 to January 31, inclusive.

Open season for rails September 1 to November 30, inclusive.

Open season for jacksnipe September 1 to December 15, inclusive.

Open season for blackbreasted plover September 1 to December 15, inclusive.

Open season for golden plover September 1 to December 15, inclusive.

Open season for yellowlegs September 1 to December 15, inclusive.

Open season for woodcock November 1 to December 31, inclusive.

Doves Not Mentioned.

Doves are not provided for and the local State and county laws will still control.

To the man who has been accustomed to hunt some species of game for 11 months in the year and who has killed woodcock in June right out of the nest and ducks until May 1, when the hens contain eggs, these restrictions will seem rather severe. To the bird lover, the farmer and the thoughtful sportsmen who wishes to kill only the natural increase each year and leave something for posterity they will appear just and reasonable, although depriving the gunner of a great many months of shooting.

All agree that spring and summer shooting is wrong and must stop to prevent absolute extermination, and that is just what these regulation mean. There will be no more summer woodcock shooting or spring ducking not only in Maryland but in the whole United States and Canada. This means better fall shooting, a greater amount of shooting to a large number of people and the preservation of our valuable bird life.

Have we any right to kick because our duck season has been shortened when we look at the matter in this light?

As to the woodcock, we are fortunate that he was not entirely removed from the game list for the period of five years along with the curlew, swan, willet, etc., as the bird has been fast disappearing in the last five years and many wanted it protected for the five-year term. The season provided for woodcock, which opens in this zone November 1, was more or less a compromise. Many wanted the season open in September and October; others objected to this as as woodcock hunters during Octobers would shoot quail out of season. Of course, summer shooting as practiced about half the counties in Maryland was out of the question; that had to be stopped So in order to prevent shooting to the quail season on the pretense of shooting woodcock, it was decided to make the woodcock opening date conform with the opening date of quail in this section, which was November 1. As Maryland has five different opening dates for quail, while Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania, North and South Carolina and others all had November 1 of course November 1 was the logical date.

No Exception To Rule.

The original dates fixed for our ducks was October 1 to January 1. It was explained to the department that we had no good ducks in these waters previous to November 1, and that if the winter was open we had good shooting in many places during January. The department recognized this and made us an exception to the regular season, giving us November 1 to January 31, a period of three months.

It is respectfully suggested that these regulations are fair and just to all; that they will afford us a reasonable amount of shooting without exterminating our birds, and it is to be sincerely hoped that all will get together and see that these regulations are adopted and enforced throughout the whole United States, including Maryland, and that the State authorities of Maryland will cooperate with the Federal authorities in seeing that the closed seasons are respected so that all will have an equal chance. A better day is ahead for the birds and those who are interested in them. Lets put aside our past covered with a blot in the shape of uninforced local county laws and pull together for more game and go fishing in the spring instead of killing mated andnesting and fledgling birds.

TREES DYING IN TOWN

Prof. Symons, of Maryland Agricultural College, Here—He Thinks Gas Kills Them.

The NEWS called attention last week to the destruction of fine shade trees in different parts of the town. Professor Symons, of the Maryland Agricultural College, visited Chestertown Tuesday, and after an investigation made the following statement to the NEWS man:

"From my observation of several cases of maple trees dying in Chestertown, and from the evidence of persons familiar with conditions, it is my opinion that the injury is mainly due to leaks in the gas mains adjacent to the affected trees. This, of course, can only be verified by an investigation of the gas mains at these particular points. The fact that the electric light wires and telephone wires are strung in the midst of the trees would serve an additional cause for injury from time to time. It is unfortunate that the city authorities permitted these wires to be run through the best shade trees of the town.

"It is, of course, quite difficult at times to diagnose a cause of injury to such trees, for there are so many things that may enter into causes of death

"The elm leaf beetle is doing serious injury to the elm trees in town. These beetles can be controlled by spraying with arsenate of lead, 3 pounds to 80 gallons of water. We can also expect injury to the foliage of locust trees from the locust dispar, an insect that is doing serious injury to many of these trees throughout the State. It also can be controlled by spraying with an arsenical jorsin."
