OLD UNICORN MILLS!

One of The Most Important Manufacturing Enterprises About Which Little is Known—Cloth Made There by Mallalieu Brothers Famous Throughout the State For Its Wearing Qualities — Mill Now Owned and Operated by The Queen Anne Cotton Company of Queen Annes County, Maryland.

One of the important industries in Queen Annes county and one of which the public generally knows very little about is the cloth weaving establishment of the Queen Anne's Cotton Company at Unicorn Mills, about a mile south of Millington. In fact, very few people in the middle ands outhern sections of the county know that such a mill exists within the borders of the county, in spite of the fact that for more than a century it has stood and operated on its present site. The mill is certainly the only one of the kind on the Eastern Shore and probably the only one now in operation in Maryland, outside of Baltimore city.

Its Early History.

Where the Unicorn Mills now stands originally stood what was known as the Old Forge Mill, which was probably established before Revolutionary War times and when what is now the town of Millington, was known as head of Chester, then a very small and insignificant village. Old records assert that John Earle and Abner Wilson conducted a "fulling" business at the old Forge Mill, which was the forerunner of the weaving industry to come later.

Ground Bark For Tanning.

Reference to the records reveals the fact that, in 1810, Richard Gibbs had a wool carding establishment at Unicorn Mills and this was probably conducted in the building which now stands.

Soon after that date, however, this business must have passed out of existence, for Unicorn then became known chiefly for its tan bark mill. The raw material or bark came from nearby forests in large quantities, and it is said that it was no uncommon occurence for the bark to be piled on the yards as high as an ordinary house, waiting to be ground up into a fine powder with which hides were taaned.

Owned by Mallalieus.

The old mill passed from the hands of one owner after another, none of them seeming to make much success of it, until March 1, 1852, when Thomas and John Mallalieu leased it for 10 years from one Thomas Walker, and inaugurated their weaving industry. Walker, the owner, died in 1855, and when the property was sold at public auction in Centreville, it was purchased by the lessees, Thomas and John Mallalieu, who continued in business under the style, Mallalieu & Brother," until the death of John Mallalieu in 1867. After that the business was conducted by the surviving brother, Thomas, style "Mallalieu Brothers," until April, 1887, when he retired from business. During the time of his ownership, Thomas Mallalieu was assisted in conducting the business by his three sons, Samuel, James and Joseph, the last named now cashier of the Millington Bank of Maryland. The three younger Mallalieus were not partners in the business with their father, however.

Cloth Famous For Durability.

The name of the Mallalieu mill became a household word in several counties, and the kersey which they manufactured at Unicorn, which was famous for its durability, was bought and worn in every community on the Eastern Shore. Indeed, at one time it was in such great demand, that orders were booked far ahead of time for shipment and long before the time-tried cloth was made. The raw material, wool, was raised by the farmers in Kent and Queen Annes counties.

Since the death of Thomas Mallalieu the old Unicorn Mill has had a dozen or more owners. It is now owned, and operated along modern lines by "Queen Anne's Cotton Company."

Thriving Business Today.

During the busy or rush season the mill gives employment to from 75 to 100 persons, male and female, and the business has so progressed that Unicorn has become quite a settlement, with its general store and public school. High up on a grass-covered and shady hill, there still stands the old mansion house, once the palatial home of a former owner of the mill. Though quaint in its construction within and without, it is still in good repair and during the busy mill season it is converted into a hotel. A large percentage of its guests, however, are mill workers. Other laborers are furnished quarters in ten company houses, built along the crest of another hill nearby.

Phenomenal Effect Of Noise.

The first floor of the mill building is divided, one section for the machinery and the other used as the cloth room, where many young girls are employed to do burling. The second floor is known as the weaving room, where the clatter of one hundred modern looms strike the visitor deaf upon his entrance. The continuous noise has had a peculiar effect upon the ear drums of one of the men who has been employed at the looms for more than 30 years. When the great mass of clattering machinery is still or if he is spoken to outside of the building, the tone of the voice must be very loud to attract his attention. He can distinctly understand anything spoken at a very low tone, however, when at work in the weaving room with all of its intricate and rackety machinery running at full speed.

The third and top floor is taken up with the winding frames and machines.

During the spring and summer months the power for running the mill's machinery is supplied by a big waterfall about a quarter of a mile away; in winter, steam power is used.

Cotton Cloth Made Now.

Men's and women's suitings and other cotton goods are being manufactured now. Some of the heavier cloths are still made there when special orders come in. When the writer visited the mill the force was short-handed and only a few were employed there at that time, which was during the dull season. —Centreville Record.

Malone, N. Y., — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has certainly done me a lot of good. I first heard of it when I was a girl and I always said that if I ever had female trouble I would take it.
