OBITUARY

In sad but loving remembrance of our darling daughter, DORA AMELIA CROUCH the youngest daughter of Amos A. and Mrry E. Crouch, who departed this life October 25, 1913, aged 3 years, 10 months and 21 days.

As the evening sun is setting
Oftimes as we sit alone;
In our hearts there comes a feeling
That our dear daughter Dora must come home.
We did not want to lose her,
But God knows what is best;
And some day we will be with her
In that sweet land of rest.
MAMA AND PAPA.

Oh, no tongue can ever tell
How much I loved her and how well;
God loved her too, and thought it best
To take my darling sister home to rest.
LITTLE SISTER.

Oh, the misery of that dreary morn.
When we stood around her bed;
Till death stole upon her softly,
And we knew her soul had fled.
GRANDPARENTS.

And since then our lives are saddened,
Since that day our hopes are slain;
But her voice seems sweetly singing,
Courage—we shall meet again.

HALLOW'EEN PARTY.

Edgewater, the cozy home of Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins Burgess, was thrown open by one of the most charming entertainments in Kent society for many years, to the witches and numerous friends of Mrs. Burgess' popular and attractive daughter, Miss Rhetta B. Warfield, on Friday night, Hallow'een. It being Hallow'een, the decorations and games were in keeping with the occasion. A large Jack o' Lantern greeted us at the door, and once inside we found ourselves veritably lost amid a scene as weird and grotesque, as one felt safe to enter. The guests were ushered in by ghosts, Misses Rhetta B. Warfield, and Isabel Jones, and the old witch, Miss Jane Gilpin Rives, of Baltimore, who sat by her tent in the rear of the hall.

Bowers of autumn leaves, and large branches of trees framed cozy corners in every direction, at first sight most tempting indeed, yet looking again, we found a witch or ghost always ready to place upon us their icy hand and wreck vengeance. Guided only by the light of Jack o' Lanterns sending their ominous rays through sharp teeth and glaring eyes, we quietly stole from room trusting somewhere to escape the witches ever presence. The mask costumes were rich and the merriment was unbounded, trying to find who each other could be, as the ridiculously masked figures stole around the house. A large moon rose above the corn stalks and branches in the parlor.

At midnight the guests were all ushered into the dining room where they were brought back to earthly thoughts by the beautifully laid table, groaning beneath its load of dainty refreshments. In the centre of the table was an immense pumpkin, with its carved faces looking at one from every side and between, over, under and around these faces were pasted images, so arranged as to look as if each was afraid the other would soon have it in its grasp. Above and around the pumpkin were banks of chrysanthemums and fruit. From each corner of the table to the centre-piece in the ceiling, from which the witches cauldron hung, were twisted yellow and black ribbons, while here and there about the table were many curios, their eyes aglow with the spirit of the occasion. The witch with her cauldron sat in a recess in the hall and told fortunes. As the wee small hours began to lengthen all voted this one of the most enjoyable evenings ever spent, and bade good morning to the happy host and hostess. Those invited were:

WEDDING BELLS.

Hurlock—Geoghegan.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of the bride, in Cambridge Tuesday morning, when Miss Eulah M. Geoghegan and Mr. Frank A Hurlock were united in the bonds of holy wedlock. The ceremony was performed a quarter after six o'clock by Rev. George W. Wray, pastor of Grace M. E. Church of which church Miss Geoghegan was organist. The house and the room in which the marriage was solemnized were attractively decorated with potted plants and chrysanthemums.

The bride wore a traveling suit of blue, with hat to match. She carried a bouquet of lillies of the valley. The wedding music was played by a sister of the groom, Mrs. W. Frank Jarrell, of Chestertown. Mr. and Mrs. Hurlock left on the train for Washington, where they will make their future home. A great many beautiful and useful presents were received.

The groom, who was formerly a member of the firm of Hurlock & Spedden, of Cambridge, is a son of Mrs. S. A. Hurlock, of Chestertown.

Rock Hall Council, Jr. O. U. A. M. held its annual set out Thursday night and a fine time enjoyed by all.
