of Hyer from Pool's Island, from which we extract the following, which gives some idea of the manner in which the vigilance of the authorities of the State was eluded. After describing the state of affairs on his arrival in Baltimore, he says:

At length a fishing smack was found, wherein there embarked about a hundred of Hyer's friends, and in this I obtained a place. About 10 o'clock, a similar conveyance had left with Sullivan and a hundred of his friends. At 12 M. we set sail and put out; the steamboat chartered by the authorities having gone a few minutes before, with all the soldiers, police, drums fifes, shooting irons, batons, maces, &c. &c. The wind was fair and brisk, but very cold and keen, and took us along at a spanking rate. We arrived off Pool's Island at 2 o'clock, P. M. Here we found the steamer engaged by the authorities, another from Philadelphia, and Sullivan's boat, all at anchor. We cast anchor ourselves and lay there for some time watching the Baltimore steamer and the soldier-folks. While there seeing a number of people on land, walking to and fro, like perturbed spirits, we concluded to send the boat ashore, to see what was going on. As I went for the purpose of "taking notes?" I went ashore with the boat and in it. On landing we found about thirty of the police making tracks to the sole house on the Island, which wasn't much of a house after all,—The object of the visit by the police was to arrest one Thomas Hyer, who was supposed to be in or about that place.

The thirty or at least one of them, knocked at the door, and demanded the body of Hyer aforesaid, in the name of the Commonwealth of Maryland and so on.—They were told that Hyer was in bed, and that, if they would allow him a short while to dress—he, the said Hyer being in nubibus, barring the shirt—they should see the object of their search. After a few minutes, they were allowed to enter the house, and were taken to the second story to a room which was described as Hyer's. Here they were introduced to Thompson. Hyer's second, and informed that Thompson was the identical chap, whom they were after with their stick.—As a matter of course, the police rejoiced with an exceeding great joy—they did—and Hyer, who was in the first, hearing what was going on, opened a window back of the house, leaped out, and departed, without leaving his card. Under the impression that Hyer had left the island, and that Sulivan had not been in it, I retraced my steps and went to the boat.—After I went on board, the vessel got underweigh and stood up the bay, in company with Sullivan's boat and the steamer from Philadelphia stood for home, believing, no doubt, that the parties were arrested, and I saw her no more.

We cruised about the bay rather vaguely, till about eight o'clock on Wednesday morning, the fleet keeping pretty close together. At that time we came within hailing distance of Sullivan's boat. One of Sullivan's friends appeared on the deck of the latter, and in a tantelizing manner said, "Show us Hyer and we'll show you Sullivan." They evidently were under the delusion that Hyer was on the island and could not escape the police. In a moment after, Hyer showed himself on our deck. Presently Sullivan appeared on the deck of his own boat, and shouted to Hyer, "You —— big lubber, I'll knock —— out of you, before I've done with you." Hyer merely smiled, but said nothing. He went down again, and while lying down on bed, said to his friends: "I want you to have this fight to come off to-day. If you fail in that to-night is a beautiful moonlight night, and let it come off then. If not, why to-morrow. Here, there, or anywhere—wherever they say, agree to it."

All the vessels now tacked and stood down the bay about twelve miles. Sullivan's boat went with us part way, then remained stationary, as though she had dropped anchor—her sails coming down.—When we saw this we hove to and dropped anchor. In a little while she hoisted sail and made for us. As soon as she came up, she hove to and dropped anchor alongside. Some person now appeared on the deck of Sullivan's boat, and asked Hyer's friends what they intend to do—"Anything you say," was the reply. Sullivan's friends proposed that the fight should come off at a place down the bay the name of which I have lost. This was agreed to, but on a further conversation it was found that we could not very conveniently land. They proposed a second place which was agreed to; but further inquiry proved that this was liable to the same objections with the place first named. They then proposed Roach's Point as the battle-ground. This was agreed to, and we stood across the bay to the place, where we landed about 2 P. M. We got ashore in small boats, about ten at a time.

All now being landed, the seconds and backers of the respective parties proceeded to select a spot for the ring, which they chose in front of a farm house, or rather a log cabin. It was certainly a pretty place, but as it was right on the point was very much exposed and bleak—the wind all the time blowing away, keen, cutting and unnatured. An oblong ring was now formed, into which, at 4 o'clock precisely, Sullivan was brought in on the back of his second. In about four minutes after Hyer was brought in like manner. They tossed up for choice of positions, and Sullivan won. The winning party chose a position which threw the rays of the setting sun directly in Hyer's face. Time being called, both men appeared and touched hands—it was such a quick motion it could not be called shaking—then instantly stood back in position. They both looked, I thought, remarkably well.

"The parties met with considerable exhibition of personal animosity, and upon exchanging blows it was with an evident determination to make short work by sharp punishment. In the early stage of the contest Hyer drew the first blood from his antagonist, but was soon afterwards struck a severe blow in the throat and knocked down. The fight then continued in a rapid succession of "rounns," Sullivan receiving at every blow from his tremendous opponent very severe punishment. The intermission between the several onsets was so brief that it seems to have been regarded as a pretty steady fight. In one of the rounds Sullivan received a severe blow over the left eye, lacerating the scalp and so lifting it from the bone of the forehead that it fell over his eye and obscured his sight.—This caused a minute's delay, while it was fastened up with sticking plaster. In a subsequent round Sullivan was struck a blow upon the back of the head with such violence that it was thought his skull was fractured as he dropped apparently liteless to the ground. He soon recovered, however, and again came up to the contest until in the fifteenth round, when Sullivan received another severe blow, which threw him heavily and awkwardly to the earth. Upon being picked up and approaching his antagonist to resume the fight, it was observed that he raised his arm to his usual position for defence with much difficulty and great pain. His features were exhibiting much weakness. His condition was observed by Hyer, who, rushing to the contest, with little difficulty struck down Sullivan's guard, caught his head under his left arm and dealt him with his huge right first a torrent of blows in the face and over the head, until as Hyer released his hold, he dropped senseless and bleeding to the earth. Thus this brutal and disgusting exhibition closed, Hyer being declared the winner.

In the course of the fight one of Sullivan's friends had attempted to pull Hyer from him, by seizing his thumb, and wrenching it violently, and as soon as Sullivan had fallen Hyer turned to this man and was about to beat him for interfering with him, but the friends of the parties mutually persuaded him to discontinue further operations for the present.

Hyer, it seems, was but slightly hurt.—One of his eyes was discolored from a blow and he had a cut over the other, but he was quite fresh when he left the ring. The time occupied by the fight is variously stated at 16, 21 and 30 minutes.

THE PRIZE STAKES.—John Fink the stakeholder for the prize fighters, states that he has paid over the stakes, $10,000, to Thomas Hyer.

☞The Rev. Thomas H. Stockton is spoken of in connection with the Presidency of the Miami University

☞The emigrants to California are taking out a good deal of specie. About $250 000 has been taken from New York in this way.

"Is Miss S. at home?" asked a gentleman of a servant who answered the call o. the knocker.

"I think not, sir, I'll go and ask her." was the reply.

A VOICE FROM VERMONT.

Tunbridge, Orange County, Vermont, November 25, 1845.

Mr. Seth W. Fowle—Dear Sir: I hereby certify that one year ago last June, I violently attacked with a cold and cough, with a lame side and stomach, and was not free from a cough during that summer In December following, my cough increased to an alarming extent, so that during that winter I lost about thirty-five pounds of flesh, and physicians with whom I advised could give me no relief. It was thought by all that I should never recover. As my good fortune would have it, in March following, after suffering exceedingly through the winter, I heard of the beneficial effects of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, by way of a friend, who had received the greatest benefit by the use of the article, and was induced by him to make a trial of it myself, and no words can express my obligations to that friend for thus recommending this article to me, and at the critical moment he did, for I had not taken up one bottle before I was completely cured, and from that day to this have not been troubled with a cough. I can cheerfully recommend it to all, as being a remedy of great value, hoping others may be induced to try it, and thus become convinced of its merits, and perhaps saved from the fatal grasp of Consumption.
