Jno. S. Tough,

Manufacturer of the genuine Etherial Oil and all kinds of Lamps for burning the same.—Also Pine oil, and Lampa.

THE very liberal encouragement received during the last season, from Southeren and Western merchants, and dealers in general, has induced him to introduce styles of ETHERIAL LAMPS, entirely original and altogether superior to former patterns, and at reduced prices. He believes that for originality, novelty and neatness of style, his stock of Etherial Lamps is not surpassed in this country.

He will still act in the pinciple work; it is his interest to study the interest of his customers. The quality of hts Etherial is not surpassed in the United States.

POETRY.

WE MAY BE HAPPY YET.

BY CHARLES SOMAN.

Ah! dearest, dry those tears away,
Which stain thy fading cheek;
Free thy sweet lips from sorrow's sway.
And words of comfort speak:
Banish the past, and with me vow
Our sorrow's to forgei;
And be hope's star our pillow now—
We may be happg yet.

The care, believe me, that enshrouds
The cheek's once cheerful ray,
Gives me more pain than all the clouds
That darken o'er our way:
Then let thy dear lips smile again,
Smile as when first we met,—
Sunshine must always follow rain—
We may be happy yet.

These clouds that o'er our bosoms lower
To-morrow may depart;
Why should we then, 'neath sorrows power
Wear out the buoyant heart.
Sun of my earthly heaven, then,
Shine as when first we met—
Ah! dearest, dry thy tears again,
We WILL be happy yet.

(From the Spirit of the Times.)

You Can Take my Hat.

BY UNCLE TOBY.

We were once coming over the railroad from Washington city to Baltimore, when we observed a peculiar sort of a man sitting hard by—a tall, slim, good-natured fellow, but one who somehow seemed to bear the impress of a person who lived by his wits, written upon his face. A friend, who was with me, answered my inquiry as to who he was, and at the same time asked me to keep between the object of my notice and myself, lest he should come over to our seat, as my companion said he knew him, but did not wish to recognize him there.

"That is Beau H——," said he "a man that is universally known in Washington as one of the most accomplished fellows in the city, always ready to borrow of, or drink with you. He never has any money, however, and I am curious to know how he will get over the road without paying, for he will surely do it some way."

"Probably he has got a ticket—borrowed the money to buy it with, so something of that sort," said I.

"Not he. Beau always travels free, and boards in the same way. He never pays money when wit or trick will pass current in their place," said my friend.

"What a shocking bad hat he has got on," said I, observing the dilapidated condition of his beaver.

"It's some trick of his, doubtless, for the rest of his dress, you will observe, is quite genteel.

"Yes, I see."

My friend went on to tell me how Beau had done his tailor out of a receipt in full for his last year's bill and the landlady at his last boarding place, and various other specimens of his ingenuity and wit:

"He owed me ten dollars," said my friend "but in attempting to collect it of him one day I'll be hanged if he didn't get ten more out of me; so I think I shall let the matter rest there, for fear of doubling the sum once more."

At this moment the conductor entered the opposite end of the cars to gather the tickets from the passengers and give them checks in return. Many of them as is often the case with travellers, who are frequently called upon, on populous routes, to chew their tickets—had placed theirs in the bands of their hats, so that the conductor could see that they were all right, and not trouble them to take them from their pockets at each stopping place. I watched Beau to see what his expedient would be to get of paying for his passage. As the conductor drew nearer, Beau thrust his head out of the car window, and seemed absorbed in contemplating the scenery on that side of the road. The conductor spoke to him for his ticket—there was no answer.

"Ticket sir," said the conductor, tapping him lightly on the shoulder.

Beau sprang back in the car, knocking his hat into the road, and leaving it in one minute nearly a mile behind. He looked first at the conductor, then out of the window after his hat, and in a seeming fit of rage exclaimed—

"What the d—l do you strike a man in that way for? Is that your business?—is that what the company hires you for?"

"I beg your pardon sir; I only want your ticket," replied the conductor, meekly.

"Ticket! O, yes, it's all very well for you to want my ticket, but I want my hat!" replied Beau, bristling up.

"Very sorry, sir, really, I merely wished to call you attention, and I took the only means, in my power," said the conductor.

"You had better use a cane to attract a person's attention next, and hit him over the head with it if he happens to be looking the other wky!" replied the indignant Beau.

"Well, sir, I will apologise to you again if you wish. I have done so already once," said the now disconcerted conductor.

"Yes, no doubt, but that don't restore my property, that's gone."

Well, sir, I cannot talk any longer—I'll take your ticket, if you please," said the conductor.

"Ticket! Heaven't you just knocked it out of of the window, hat and all? Do you want to add insult to injury?"

Oh, your ticket was in the hat band?" suggested the conductor.

"Supposing you stop the train, and go back and see?" said the hatless Beau, with indignant scorn depicted on his face.

"Well, sir, I shall pass you free over the road then," replied the conductor, attempting to go on with his duty.

BARBER SHOP SCENE.

OR THE

WAY TO GET SHAVED BEFORE YOUR TURN.

At the Barbers shop opposite Smith's clock store, on Fifth street, a most laughable trick was played off on the boys in the shop.

The room was well supplied with customers, and the chance of getting shaved in a hurry was out of the question.

A small man with a waggish look came to the door, and after surveying the crowd, walked in and took a seat on the sofa.

"How far is it to the doctor's office asked the strange gentlemen.

"Just across the way," replied one of the boys.

"I felt bad,' said he, and at the same time a spasm took him, and his hands clenched and his legs drew up in a perfect ball, and he rolled off on the floor,

"That's a cholera case," said one, and he took his hat and left. This was the signal, and all followed suit except those undergoing the shaving operation.

The spasm seemed to subside—the arms and legs stretched out at full length and the patient lay prostrate on his back

'Wipe off the lather,' said the fat man next door, I'll come in again—I can't stay now.

Just then another spasm took the stranger and by some strange movement he bounced upon the sofa without any apparent effort, flat on his back as he was lying on the floor. He rolled up into a ball again and rolled backward and forward on the sofa in a style that would have done credit to a circus man.

This was a finisher; those that were shaved left and those not shaved hadn't time to stay, the boys looked at each other in astonishment. The cholera subject unrolled himself and asked them if his turn had come, when he took his seat and had a good shave.

'What's the charge?' asked the stranger.

'Nothing,' said the barber, 'if you will leave your name.—Cincinatti Commercial

"The price of a ticket," said Beau, "is one dollar; my beaver cost me a V. Your good sense will at once show you that there is a balance of four dollars in my favour at any rate."

The conducter hesitated. Beau looked like a gentleman, to one not perfetly well posted up in the human face he was well dressed, and his indignation appeard most honest.

I'll see you after I have collected the tickets," replied the conductor, passing on through the car. Beau sat in silent indignation, frowning at everybody until the official returned, and came and sat down by his side. Beau then, in an earnest undertone, that we could only overhear occasionally, talked to the conductor like a "Dutch uncle," and we saw the crestfallen man of tickets pay the hatless passenger four dollas.

The trick was at once seen through by both my friend and myself, and the next day, over a bottle of wine at the Monument House, Beau told us he was hard up, hadnt a dollar, picked up an old hat at Gadsby's hotel in Washington, put his cap in his pocket, and resolved that the hat should carry him to Baltimore, and it did, with four dollars into the bargain.

☞"You must take wine and bark," said a physician to his patient.

"What kind of bark?" asked the patient.

"Why, dog-wood, to be sure," said the doctor.

The sick man growled out "puppy," and and indignantly threatened to kick his medical adviser into the kennel.

Jean Paul Ritcher, it was who said, "No man can either live piously, or die righteous, without a wife." A very wicked old bachelor of our acquaintance says to this: "O yes, suffering and serve trials purify and chasten the heart."

A SMART WOMAN.—"Did you ever see any of the popular novels?" said a city dame to a country cousin.

"No, ma'am, but I have seen POPLER trees."

LOVE AFFAIRS.—Thackeray, in his new novel Pendennis, says:

"Perhaps all early love affairs, ought to be strangled, or drowned like so many blind kittens."

NEW INVENTION.—A patent is about to be secured for a new style of spring-cushions, mattresses, etc., to be stuffed with live grasshoppers.

The man who takes no papers,
Or, taking, pays not when they're read,
Would sell his corn to buy a 'horn"
And live on borrowed bread.

☞Speculation is a word that sometimes begins with its second letter.
