ALREADY SOLD!

134 Spring Suits of Clothes

Only Another Evidence That We Have the Goods!

At the time this advertisement was handed to the editors of the KENT NEWS, the firm of Bordley & Sons had sold exactly 134 Spring and Summer Suits of Clothes—and the season scarcely yet opened!

We do not advertise this fact in a spirit of boastfulness, but merely offer it as only another indication of what we have contended all along—that we carry the goods that satisfy and bring customers back, and the men and young men of this vicinity, INITIATED OR OTHERWISE, are fast learning where the better grades of goods are kept.

In this group of 134 suit customers are represented many of the finest dressed men of the county, some of whom are regular customers, some of whom are new, but all of whom leave our shop with an expression of eminent satisfaction. Have you ordered your new suit yet? If not, it will be a pleasure to show you some of our lines.

ON THE TROT.

The world is on the trot, and it is some trot.

We have the fox trot, the turkey trot, the dog trot, the gold trot and the silly trot.

And everybody's trotting.

If we don't trot for one thing, we trot for another.

The young man trots along in the wake of the dainty maid.

The bald head man trots around hunting for any kind of a skirt.

The millionaire trots in harness with his affinity.

The dude trots in the halo of his own silliness.

The miser trots after his gold, and the grafter trots the road to hell.

The politican trots in the limelight of publicity, and the voter trots at his beck and call.

The hypocrite trots around in the cloak of religion, and the godly man trots after the souls of men.

Death trots in the trenches of Europe, while misery and starvation trot over the heartstrings of the women and children left at home.

It is the day of the trot, and we are essentially a people of today.

For we trot.
