POETRY.

The Silk Worm's Death Song

BY F. S. KEY.

Oh let me alone—I've a work to be done,
That can brook not a moments delay;
While yet I breathe—I must spin and weave,
And rest not by night or day—
Food or sleep I will never take,
Till my destined task is done;
Then my rest shall be sweet, in the winding sheet
That around me I've spun.

I was once a base and a grovelling thing,
And the dust of the earth my home;
But now I know, the end of my woe,
And the day of my bliss is come.
I shall wake—I shall wake—a glorious form
Of brightness and beauty to wear;
I shall burst from the gloom of the opening tomb
And breath in the balmy air.

I shall spread my new wings to the morning sun
On the summer's breath I'll live;
And I'll bathe me where, in the dewy air,
The flowers their sweetness give.
The earth shall not soil my delicate feet,
I'll spring to the bright'ning sky;
And with every breeze, wherever I please,
On joyous wings I'll fly.

And wherever I go, timid mortals shall know,
That, like me, from their tombs they shall rise;
That to them shall be given, by mandate of Heaven
A new life and new home in the skies.
Let them, like me, make ready their shrouds
Nor shrink from the mortal strife;
And like me they shall sing, as upward they spring.
"Death is not the end of life."

☞A girl seventeen years old was bitten by a rattlesnake on the left instep. Two hours and a half afterwards Dr. T. A. Atchison who describes the case in the Southern Medical Journal, visited her and found her sightless, with her face swollen and her mind wandering. He placed her in a hot salt bath, and administered whiskey and carbonate of ammonia until she had taken three pints of the first and eighty grains of the latter; no intoxication followed, and she was cured.

'No one can do a thing against his will,' said a metaphysician.

'Be jabers, I had a brother, said Pat, 'that went to Bottany Bay, an' faith I know it was greatly against his own will.'

☞The man who said he lived in Woo-ces-ter, took the prize at the hen show for the best roo-ces-ter.

'HERE you little rascal, walk up and give an account of yourself. Where have you been?'

'After the girls, father!'

'Did you ever know me to do so, when I was a boy?'

'No, sir—but mother did.'

☞There's a man 'down east' so tall, that he has to use a ten-foot pole to pick his teeth with.

THEODORE PARKER says:—"It is better to throw a guard about the baby's cradle than to sing a psalm at a bad man's death bed; better to have a care while the bud is bursting to the sun, than when the head has scorched the heart of the unguarded blossom."

We are decidedly of his opinion.—News.
