RECOMPENSE

SERGEANT J. RAYMOND ELDERDICE.

[The following poem, by Raymond Elderdice, son of Dr. J. L. Elderdice, of the Maryland Conference, was published in "Stars and Stripes," and are glad to reproduce it. We have published no finer expression of poetic genius.—Eds.]

I.

I may not see again the sunshine falling,
June eventide, athwart a cottage door
Where mocking birds, in arias enthralling,
Their golden floods of melody outpour;
Where roses red, in pure, estactic rapture,
Climb upward with their wondrous scent and bloom;
Shedding their fragrant petals as they capture
Their paradise—the casement of her room.

II.

And as I skulk in dark and sodden trenches,
Befouled with mud and slime and clotting blood—
My soul is stifled with the awful stenches
That surge upon me in a stinking flood;
Before me, grisly heaps of dead and dying,
Rising fast, blot out the smiling sky,
And all at once my tortured soul is crying,
"Why?"—in fevered, mad rebellion—"Yhy?"

III.

And then it seems that God, in wondrous fashion,
Fathoms the depths of human agony,
And gentrly stills the spirit's fiery passion,
Revealing what the recompense shall be:

IV.

The little cottage by the maples shaded,
Where roses red up to her casement steal,
Shall never have its sanctity invaded—
Rose petals ground beneath a Prussian heel!
She shall not see the hostile hordes assailing,
Nor shudder from their butchery, nor—worse,
Shriek to the savage Hun's prayers unavailing,
Who answer with a laugh, a shot, a curse.

V.

She shall not see the last, red-glowing ember,
The fiery sparks form blackened ruins pour;
And gazing at the awful scene remember
When roses climbed above the cottage door.
Nay, she whose purest love is in my keeping,
Shall not at midnight start from troubled rest,
In terror shriek at one who, swiftly creeping—
Leaves her at dawn with bleeding, sword-slashed breast.

VI.

I may not see again the sunshine falling,
June eventide, athwart a cottage door—
But mocking-birds, in arias entralling,
Shall golden floods of melody outpour;
And roses red, each June, in wildest rapture
Shall bring to her their fragrance and their bloom;
Though I may never see them as they capture
Their paradise—the casement of her room.

—Stars and Stripes.

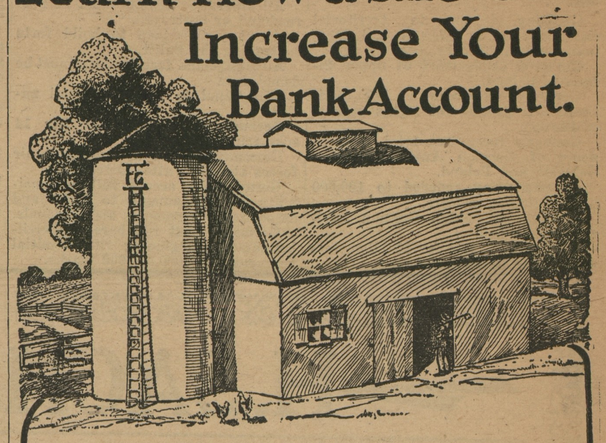
Learn How a Silo Can Increase Your Bank Account.



In a West Virginia community droughts and hot weather "burnt up" the crops three years in succession. One farmer built a silo and bought a few cattle. The results were so satisfactory that the next season there were fully a half dozen silos on different farms and more stock appeared.

Today this West Virginia community is studded with silos and is one of the most prosperous farming communities in the state.

The moral is this: That the greatest profits of farming are in feeding part of the crops to live stock. The silo makes it possible to feed the stock at little cost, and you derive profits both from dairying and then selling the stock for market.

Write for our free silo booklet. It tells you all about silos and how one on your farm will greatly increase your profits.

Build Now. We are not only in position to immediately make shipments of silos, but we are also equipped and have in stock for immediate shipment everything needed in building from fencing to houses and barns.

Our Architectural Department will furnish you free of charge plans and specifications for any kind of a building you want to put up. Because of our immense facilities we can serve you better and save you money.

SMASHED WORLD'S RECORD

OVERLAND Model 90 has established a new world's non-stop, high gear record!

The old record was smashed to smithereens out in Oklahoma by a stock car, a plain, every day duplicate of every Model 90 in Kennedyville. Ran seven days and seven nights in high gear. Covered 4370.1 miles without stopping. Didn't change a spark plug or make a carburetor adjustment. Equivalent to the distance from Reading to Los Angeles and back to Oklahoma City!

It finished in perfect condition mechanically—without the slightest complaint over having undergone the severest test to which a motor ever has been put, for such a length of time.

The car was sealed in high gear and the shift lever removed. And if weather and roads had joined purposely to defeat it, a worse combination could not have been presented. But Model 90 ploughed through the mud and rain and hung up a new high mark. The most notable achievement in recent annals of motordom.

Mind you! This test wasn't conducted over city boulevards and asphalt streets—that's no test.

Exceptional performance is Model 90's chief claim to the right of superiority. And in this we are backed by the confidence of more than 150,00 owners the world over, who are traveling more miles at less expense, with more genuine satisfaction than any other self-starting motor car produced.

Aside from performance, it is the handsomest motor car in the entire field costing $1200 or under, is as easy riding as any car in any class, is backed here in Kennedyville by unlimited facilities for handling all kinds of service, and, at $985.00 f. o. b. Toledo, you can save a couple hundred dollars more for the Fifth Liberty Loan.

Model 90 is a car you really can't afford not to own.

"Thrift Car" is not a slogan. It's a specification.

The mileage to a gallon of gasoline was 20 66-100.
