THE FIGHT FOR PROHIBITION

Written for the Fairlee W. C. T. U., by Talmadge A. R. Strong, and read at a most enjoyable "Social" held by them Saturday night, May 11th.

If problems come before you,
How to solve them you can't tell,
Just leave it to the women,
They will solve them very well.

So the women saw this problem.
"How could John Barleycorn be brought down,"
And the way they solved this problem
Has won them both fame and renown.

In the year eighteen hundred seventy-five
The temperance work began to thrive.
Since then it has grown, span by span,
Until it envelopes the entire land.

Then the women formed a Union
And in union there is power.
They were constantly striving onward
For their purpose every hour.

Because the women saw the danger
That awaited us at hand,
If this monster evil flourished
And was not banished from our land.

Then they choose for them a leader
And she helped them in their work.
Frances E. Willard was her name;
No duty did she shirk.

Thus the temperance army was organized—
Under the White Ribbon did they fight.
Because it stands for purity
And everything that's right.

Fort Barleycorn was the objective point,
King Alcohol was the defender.
The White Ribbons put up such a fight
That Alcohol was forced to surrender.

So King Alcohol surrendered the fort.
The taking was no easy task.
He gave his sword to the White Ribboner's,
Which he carried in a flask.

King Alcohol now lies defeated—
Glory has he none.
His glory has gradually faded away
Like the light of the setting sun.

Now the White Ribbon floats over Fort Barleycorn
And flows in the gentle breeze.
May the White Ribboners extend their conquests
In foreign lands across the seas.

If problems come before you,
How to solve them you can't tell
Just leave it to the women
They will solve them very well.
