Venida truly rules the waves my temper, time and looks it saves. 'Tis made of finest human hair to match all shades, brunette or fair. So good the match, for young or old. From one's own hair it can't be told netted by hand. It come two styles—transforming stormy days to smiles: the "Fringe" is either veil or net; the "Cap" defied both wind and wet. Tis shaped and self-comforting, too. A blessing after a shampoo. 'Tis stirilated, guaranteed and everyday fills every need. These briefly, are the reasons why Venida nets I always buy—at

REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE

By one who was there

At Albaugh's Theatre in Baltimore on Monday several hundred Republicans gathered from all parts of the State to deliberate on the selectionof a Republican candidate for United States Senator. Mr. Weller's candidacy, already announced, has not met with a cordial reception, both because of his previous factional alignments and because of a quite widespread opinion that Mr. Weller does not measure up to the statute expected of a United States Senator.

Monday's meeting was opened by Gen. N. Winslow Williams, who introduced J. Kemp Bartlett as the presiding officer. Mr. Bartlett read a carefully prepared address wherein he arraigned the incompentency and extravagance of the present Democratic administration and said the times called for the election of Republicans—and the best the party can put forward. He also arraigned the tyrannical methods of the Weller-Jackson-France triumvirate that has assumed autocratic rule of the Republican party in the State.

Edwin G. Baetjer followed in a calm logical review of the political demands upon the electorate in these crucial times and a cold-blooded dissection of Mr. Weller's political history and methods.

"Tom" Parran made a characteristic speech, saying he was getting tired of going out year after year to work for the party only to be licked. He said he noticed that the little group of millionaires who claimed to own the party could not control their own counties. "Cecil," he said, "is Democratic, Wicomico is Democratic and Baltimore county is Democratic, and those are the three counties where our three Republican millionaires live."

Frank E. Williams followed and Mr. Parran called on him to "shake 'em up, old man." "No," said Mr. Williams, "but as cold as this theatre is, I'll guarantee you gentlemen will be a heap sight colder in about sixty seconds," and then Mr. Williams proceeded to empty his bucket of ice water on the assembly by telling them they were just "shooting holes in the air," until they got down to brass tacks and realized that the Weller-Jackson-France coalition dictated the party's policies and candidates, because they own it; they put up the money for its campaigns and claim thereby the right to say who shall be its candidates; it is a disgusting situation, but the Republican party is solely responsible for it; at every election it goes cap in hand to Jackson, Weller and France, who put up three-fourths of the entire campaign funds; I know from the inside what I am talking about, and until the Republican party is prepared to cut loose from its financial subserviency to these three gentlemen, it can reasonably expect nothing else than their domination."

John Murphy, editor of the Afro-American, said he wanted to warn the Republican party in Maryland that more representation must be given to the colored voters in the distribution of offices and in the party councils, or the party must not expect to hold that big colored vote solidly in the future. He said Nice's recent defeat for Governor was largely due to the failure of the Broening administration in Baltimore to recognize the colored voters in official appointments.

Mr. Pownell, of Allegany county, took a whack at the party dissensions and at the failure of the "great Republican party in Maryland to have a party organ; when a man reads the Baltimore American he can't tell half the time whether he is reading a Democratic or Republican sheet."

This shot brought J. Cookman Boyd to his feet with a tearful defense of the American and General Agnus.

And so the discussion flowed on and the hour waxed late. Finally ex-Gov. ernor Goldsborough got the floor and made a stirring address, repudiating any talk of his own candidacy for United States Senator, and appealing for the burial of factional differences in the interest of the election of a Republican Senator. He wound up with presenting a resolution, authorizing the chairman to appoint a committee of 27 (one for each county and one from each legislative district of Baltimore City) to deliberate on its selection of a candidate without, if possible, a primary contest.

After some little discussion the resolution was passed and the conference adjourned.

To a man up a tree it looked as if the assembled hosts had bravely marched up the hill—and then marched down again. This observer is from Missouri, when it comes to appraising the practical value of the gathering.

Terrapin King. — Kent County's "turtle King" used to be "Huck" Coleman but since his removal no one has come to claim the honor. Over in Delaware Hiram Williams, of Seaford, claims this title. Monday morning was the biggest morning's work he had so far. When he returned from the flats of the Nanticoke he had with him more than 200 pounds of fine terrapin. He is receiving 30 cents per pound for them, and has a select trade which he ships to, consisting of doctors, lawyers and other professional men — one man alone — a prominent attorney of Elkton, taking about 100 pounds every other week.

Williams catches the terrapin while they are in a state of coma. They are salt water terrapin, but inhabit fresh water during certain parts of the winter. They lie on the bottom of the stream and are caught by strong iron drags. The flavor is the diamond-back terrapin.

These terrapin will live for as long as two months after being taken out of the water.

HORACE B. DERRICK

Our County Farm Demonstrator is a graduate of the Business High School of Washington, D. C.; also of the Maryland State College of Agriculture, where he received the B. S. degree. At the State College he was a member of the football and baseball teams each year and captain of the baseball team in his senior year. He had the honor of being president of the Y. M. C. A. for one year and president of his class for three years. He holds his commission as captain of the Cadets at the State College.

In 1917 Mr. Derrick accepted a commission in the U. S. Marine Corps serving for two years. He resigned his commission of captain in the U. S. Marine Corps to follow agriculture. The Extension Service of the Maryland State College employed Mr. Derrick as assistant county agent of Washington County until August 11, 1919, when he received the appointment of county agricultual agent of Kent County. He is making good here.
