Practising His Reading.—Barclay, the 13-year-old son of Mr. Eshman, of the Voshell House, having been reading recently how to make his hens lay longer, determined to try out one of the plans. He attached a cord to the light in the kitchen, and passed it out the window to his chicken house. He did not realize, however, that when he pushed the window up tight at the top it had cut off all the light in the big hotel. The electrician was called and soon discovered the trouble and repaired the same. Barclay has decided to try other methods. He has a number of little chicks which he hatched out of an incubator under the side porch and is now building a larger house. Barclay will make a fine lecturer some day and will then tell of his first experiences in the chicken business.

Kent Countians in Mix-Up.—A dispatch from Dover Monday says, "Another serious accident was narrowly averted, yesterday, on Lockerman street, near State street, when Thomas C. Roe, in turning out his automibile to avoid running into another car, ran into and struck Dr. J. M. Twilley, a Dover dentist, who was standing by an automobile talking to the tenant on his farm. Just as Dr. Twilley had finished the conversation with his tenant, Miss Marcella Thomas, of Centreville, Md., who was walking along Lockerman street,recognized him and stepped down from the street to the curb to speak to him, when the Roe car struck Dr. Twilley and in his fall he knocked Miss Thomas down, both falling backward but a few inches from the curb.

Miss Thomas, beyond a soiled dress and having mud spattered on her arms and face, was uninjured. Dr. Twilley sustained bruises on his arm as the wheel of the car struck him with sufficient force to knock him down.

Another car coming around from State street, to avoid getting mixed in the already perplexing condition of things, ran up on the pavement, barely escaping a crash into the window of W. J. Benson's shoe store.
